Korean officials bring gifts to Bush library

The Texas A&M George Bush Presidential Library Foundation received two gifts last week totaling $900,000 from the Korea Foundation.

The Korea Foundation is an independent, nonprofit organization established in 1922 to promote international exchange, mutual understanding and friendship among the people of Korea and other countries.

Korean officials visited College Station April 17 to officially present the two gifts.

The first, totaling $250,000, will establish the Korean Grants Program. The program will provide research grants for faculty and graduate students conducting research on East Asia at the Bush Library or the Bush School of Government and Public Service.

The second gift, totaling $650,000, consists of gifts from seven Korean companies and will be used as a restricted endowment for educational and outreach purposes.

50th anniversary of Fulbright

The prestigious scholarship offers a variety of opportunities and experiences

By Heather Pace
 THE BATTALION

In three months' time, a Texas A&M anthropology professor discovered million-year-old tools and found evidence of the world's changing climate.

Dr. Bruce Dickson made these discoveries while studying in Kenya on a Fulbright Scholarship. He studied the Kakwa Lelaha rock shelter, a cave that was inhabited more than 30,000 years ago.

The experience not only furthered Dickson's archeological research, it also gave him insight into Kenya's culture.

"Being able to live in Kenya for such a long time," Dickson said, "I got to know the people and the country a little better than I had known before."

In celebration of the 50th anniversary of the program that made Dickson's journey possible, today is Fulbright Scholars Day.

To increase awareness of Fulbright opportunities, there will be a workshop open to faculty from 1-4 p.m. in 230-31 MSC.

Typically, three A&M former students or faculty members travel abroad each year courtesy of the prestigious Fulbright program.

Fulbright recipients receive airfare, lodging, a stipend and all other necessities for their travel and research.

Suzanne Gyeszly, a Fulbright Scholar and library professor, just returned from Hungary, where she spent three months advising the Hungarian National Library.

"I realized how lucky and fortunate we are to have everything we do at Texas A&M," Gyeszly said.

During her stay in Hungary, Gyeszly focused on improvements to on-line and other automated services.

"My main function there was to come up with a plan as to how electronic automation will change the services offered by the library," Gyeszly said.

Faculty and graduating students can apply for the Fulbright and the Junior Fulbright Scholarships, respectively.

Mona Rizk-Finne, the Fulbright Program adviser and director of Study Abroad Programs and informational meetings for students will be available throughout the spring and summer to get students started on the lengthy application, which is due in early fall.

"It takes several months for students to be ready for the deadline in the fall," Rizk-Finne said. "Students must work very closely with students to groom them to compete on a national level."

The number of Fulbrights offered each year varies depending on how many grants the United States solicits from participating countries.

In 1995, the United Kingdom offered 89 grants for which 64 people applied. Germany provided 208 Fulbrights to 555 applicants.

Jason Barrett, a graduate student in archaeology, said applicants face tough competition, especially if they want to go to an English-speaking country.

"The odds depend on where you want to go," Barrett said. "The countries where the language requirement is English are more competitive because you don't have to have proficiency in the language."

RHA supports more dorm recycling

Recycling paper in dorms is not a fire hazard

By Tauma Wiggins
 THE BATTALION

The Texas A&M Residence Hall Association supported several changes to increase residence hall recycling as members revised their recommendations for the RHA Recycling Contract Wednesday night.

Changes included the addition of paper, plastic and glass to the list of items recycled by the halls. RHA also recommended that policies become more stringent, making halls more responsible for completing their recycling duties.

These changes will be reviewed by the Residence Life and Housing before they will go into effect next semester.

The RHA Recycling Contract can be adopted by any A&M residence hall, and it incorporates the use of trash bins that, at present, offer only aluminum can recycling.

The Recycling Contract formerly did not include paper in its recycling efforts because of residents' concerns that paper might pose as a fire hazard to the residence halls.

Cassandra Delarios, the 1996 RHA environmental affairs chairman and senior geography major, has been pushing for changes in the RHA Recycling Contract.

She discovered through discussions with A&M administration that recycling paper is acceptable within residence halls, providing that the recycling bins do not block stairways.

Chuck Berend, the Schuhmacher Hall RHA delegate and a senior agriculture business major, said he believes the program has not been a priority for administrators or students in the past.

"There's not enough support from the University right now," Berend said. "I don't think it's a priority with the administration or that they think that it's a priority with the students."

Chuck Crews, the 1996 RHA

environmental chair and chemistry major, said the RHA Recycling Contract will open the door for the recycling of plastic and glass, and RHA intends to hold residence halls responsible for recycling these items once the contract is adopted.

"There are dorms that are doing an excellent job, and there are also dorms that aren't doing anything," Crews said. "The new contract says that anyone who signs the contract will have to abide by the rules and bring receipts to prove they are recycling."

Crews said recycling paper and glass, which constitute a majority of trash, will help reduce the waste taken to the large Station landfill, which is expected to reach capacity by the year 2000.

"Newspapers and beer cans make up a lot of the trash," Crews said. "We hope that by getting more recycled, we will cut down on the garbage and a new bin will not have to open, which would cause a rent increase in the residence halls."

Dr. Donald L. Cushing Library

"We are as a library," Dr. Cushing said. "The room, the artifacts, the oldest and rarest..."

Dr. Cushing said the library provides not only research, but also a place for students to study. Things at the library are much different from other libraries.

A&M in 1977, the library was filled with books and manuscripts. "Its image, however, is not as visible," he said. Now, 10 years later, the library holds a large collection of books, manuscripts, and other materials. One of the library's largest collections is the "Students and Alumni" collection, which includes books, manuscripts, and other materials. "What we exhibit use of research..."

The Cushing Library is a special place. It is a place where students can find the history of the school's way into the future. In 1963, John... with Squad... Cadets. The p...
