Orientation

"Parents don't care about what tradition was here in 1912," Vickery said. "Their first concern is about what's going to happen to their son or daughter. They are going to ask how easy it is to buy alcohol under 21 here and we are going to answer them. If they asked the same question to an OL right next to Dr. Southerland they might not feel like they would get an honest answer."

Vickery said orientation leaders have been trained to deal with parent's questions and the first parent/student panel will be held today. Lisa Gonzalez, an orientation leader and senior business major, said she has wanted to be an OL since she observed them during her own orientation. "I was very impressed when I went through (Orientation)," Gonzalez said. "Everyone was so willing to help and friendly. I wanted to be a part of it."

Gonzalez said this year's orientation training has stressed multiculturalism, diversity, and the fact that Orientation is not only for freshman.

"They want to make us (OL's) aware there are many different groups and to include everyone, handicapped students, adult students, but not to focus on just one group."

Tuition

Clancy said the fund is designed for the benefit of the parents.

"Comptroller Sharp comes from a family with several children and remembers his family talking about how to afford college," Clancy said. "His family was solid middle class but was too wealthy to qualify for need based scholarship and financial aid. But he had too little money to feel comfortable. The program is for middle class families like his own."

Nicole's parents, Belinda and Dana Rich, said the reasons above are why they invested in the fund.

"Nicole wants to go on to dentistry school," The Riches said. "We got the first four years out of the way, and now we're planning her doctorate work. We feel relieved now that we've got that out of the way. It's a great alternative to parents if they're middle or upper middle class. Chances are, their child isn't going to get financial aid. It offers other alternatives that meet their financial needs."

Nicole said she is glad her parents decided to utilize the fund.

"My parents wanted to sign up so that my college would be paid for and they wouldn't have to deal with the financial worries of that," Nicole said. "They signed up at the beginning of May. I think it's beneficial because it helps parents and whoever uses the fund not have to worry and think they have to come up with the money to pay for college every year."

The Riches said when Nicole chose to attend A&M, it helped them decide to use the fund.

"Nicole knew she wanted to go to A&M," the Riches said. "Since she knew she wanted to go there, we knew we could pay her tuition at today's prices. If it goes up four percent next year, we've already saved that money. Who's to say how much it's going to go up over the next four years. All we have to pay is room and board."

The fund has already received an enormous amount of response.

"The response has been tremendous," Clancy said. "We opened the fund from January through March. This was the first year for it to be open. We will reopen it in the fall. We have 41,000 contracts signed. They are worth 372 million dollars. We are going to have annual enrollment periods. We're going to throw it open every year and get parents to sign up."

Rich said the program is an incentive for her to do well in school.

"It's really a good program," Rich said. "I want to take full advantage of it. I love being at A&M; it's a good school. I'm glad I did this. It motivates me to want to get ahead."
