at birds, snakes, or other big animals. He has very varied experience."

Ginger Brown, llama breeder and safety coordinator in the safety and health department, said she agrees with Moyer's praise of Drew.

"He wants everyone to benefit from his knowledge," Brown said. "He acts as a resource that people can draw information from, and he has really extended A&M's reputation."

Cliff Hashimoto, a fourth-year vet student, said Drew's hands-on approach to teaching has been beneficial.

"His teaching philosophy is to let us experience what we want, but he will be a safety net if you need it," Hashimoto said. "Tools are useless, unless you have the skills to perform."

Drew said he has very specific goals for his students to accomplish.

"I want them to leave me with some comfort level when dealing with these exotic species," he said. "I want to convince them (students) that the same thought process and principals that go into treating a dog cat can be applied to a parrot or iguana." Hashimoto said Drew's efforts are well-received by his students.

"Dr. Drew is very positive and encouraging. He is more of a friend than an instructing clinician. Drew said he enjoys being an exotic-animal veterinarian because it requires innovation.

"With all the different species, we constantly have to invent things to deal with the unknown," he said. "It's the challenge that each day brings that took me into this little area."

The program currently has 35 students and offers a master's of visualization science degree requiring at least two years for completion.

Students' undergraduate backgrounds range from journalism to classics, although computer science and environmental design degrees are more common.

Donald House, the program's academic coordinator, said his goal is to maintain a well-rounded program for the students.

"As the entertainment field becomes more saturated, we want students to be able to apply their skills in other areas," House said. "Our goal is to teach a broad range of skills."

Technical, artistic, students develop cognitive and computer science skills to communicate ideas by using digital and electronic media.

With a 100 percent placement rate, students can easily find computer graphics jobs in entertainment, commercial production, architecture or consulting.

Jean-Claude Kalache, a master's student from Beirut, Lebanon, said he is confident his hard work will pay off.

"I'm not stressed about finding a job," Kalache said. "Being in this program is one of the best choices I've ever made."

Kalache said he hopes to eventually open his own graphics business after gaining valuable experience with the bigger companies.

Former students have been involved with the special effects for such films as Pocahontas, Manji and Dragonheart.

David Walvoord, the graduate assistant system administrator was recently hired by Blue Sky Productions in New York as a technical director. He said the graphics field requires dedication.

"The money we earn is good, but we work really long hours," Walvoord said. "You have to love what you are doing."

"We thought it was the end of the world," said Walid, a 22-year-old Saudi who was walking nearby at the time of the explosion. "Some were crying. Some just sat on the ground and held their ears." He declined to give his full name.

No one claimed responsibility for the explosion in Al-Khobar, a Dhahran suburb in eastern Saudi Arabia, but suspicion fell on Muslim militants opposed to Western military presence in the kingdom and elsewhere in the Gulf.

The attack raised new concerns about the political future of Saudi Arabia, long seen as a bastion of stability in a volatile region. It is the world's largest oil exporter and the United States' strongest Gulf ally.

"America takes care of its own," a grim President Clinton said, dispatching an FBI team to investigate the attack on the Air Force base, which helps enforce the U.N. no-fly zone over Iraq.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher, speaking from Jerusalem, said: "We will not rest until these terrorists are brought to justice. We will hunt them down."

Eighteen Americans were killed, and at least 270 were wounded, said Pentagon spokesman Navy Lt. Kevin Aandahl. Earlier Pentagon reports said 23 Americans were killed, but the toll was revised downward early today.

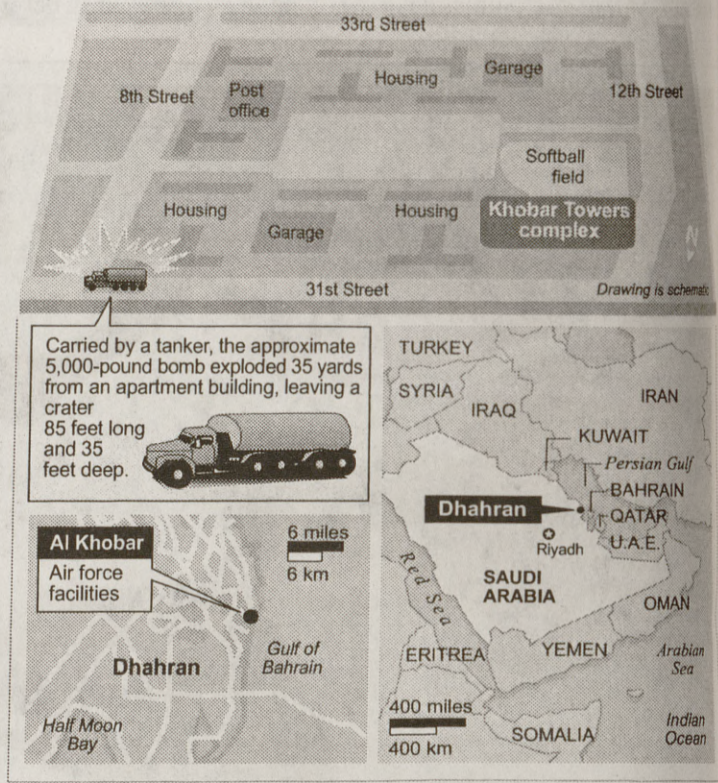

All of the dead and injured were Americans, Pentagon officials said. The totals were expected to climb, in part because of the sheer size of the bomb: authorities believe 2 1/2 tons of explosives were packed in the truck.

King Fahd offered his condolences in a telephone call to Clinton. He expressed his "sorrow and pain for this deplorable terrorist act which is rejected by all religions," the official Saudi Press Agency reported.

Saudi security forces kept the area cordoned off this morning, and American soldiers in full battle gear shouted at onlookers to clear off. Investigators and rescue teams aided by five bulldozers were moving debris, searching for possible survivors and clues.

Tanker explosion

A truck bomb exploded at a U.S. Air Force housing complex at the edge of a Saudi base near Dhahran.

Carried by a tanker, the approximate 5,000-pound bomb exploded 35 yards from an apartment building, leaving a crater 85 feet long and 35 feet deep.
