Brides of Jesus bring funk style to B-CS

By April Towery
THE BATTALION

Although Brides of Jesus may sound like a controversial band title, the power of the band lies in its music, not its name.

Brides of Jesus, a six-piece funk band based in Athens, Ga., will play at the Dixie Theatre tonight. Vocalist and guitarist Bill Iuso said the band is an interesting mix of people.

"We range in age from 19 to 39," Iuso said, "and the oldest are the most immature."

Iuso said the name Brides of Jesus was created from an old Little Feet song.

"We've gotten some negative feedback on our name," Iuso said. "Some people just think it's total blasphemy."

"Some people just think it's total blasphemy."

— BILL IUSO
vocalist and guitarist of Brides of Jesus

"We wanted people to remember us. We could be called So and So and the Rockets and people might think we're really great, but could never remember our name. We want to lock it in peoples' heads."

Brides of Jesus released their first album on the N'Awlins Music label, What's Gonna Set You Free? in 1994.

Iuso said the album title is about in an interesting way.

"We were driving on bridge on Interstate 95 in England and we saw 'What's gonna set you free?' spray-painted on it, so that's what we named our album," Iuso said. "Later, we were driving on the same bridge and the question had been answered, it was 'happas cookies and milk.'"

"At the time we had an untitled instrumental song on our album so we used that as the title."

Brides of Jesus is currently completing their second album with producer Johnny Sandlin.

Although the band writes most of its own songs, it has been known to play an occasional cover song.

"We just added a cover of TLC song 'Waterfalls' to our album," Iuso said. "It turns a lot of heads."

Brides of Jesus has been together for about four years and maintains a close-knit bunch. In the band played over 150 shows.

"When you ride in a van that long with six guys, you either get along or you don't," Iuso said. "We fight like family."

Brides of Jesus has played with well-known bands such as Dave Matthews Band, the Roots, George Clinton and the Roots.

Iuso said the band is sensitive with the mood of the crowd.

"We feed off the energy," Iuso said. "As the crowd gets loose, we do."
