Lasorda retires after 45 years with Dodgers

LASORDA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tom Lasorda, an ambassador and cheerleader for baseball for nearly two decades, retired today as manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers after having heart surgery last month.
Lasorda, 68, underwent the angioplasty procedure when it was determined he had a heart attack. He said was cleared medically to return, but realized it made sense to retire.
"For me to get into a uniform again — as excitable as I am — I could not continue," Lasorda, his voice shaking, said at a Dodger Stadium news conference. "I decided it's best for me and the organization to step down. ... That's quite a decision."
He had said as recently as Friday he intended to return. He changed his mind after meeting wave in my chest. I felt the ground shake around me. The sound was distinctive, dull and pungent. It's something I'll remember for the rest of my life.

I didn't know what to do. Part of me wanted to see what had happened. Part of me wanted to run and help. The rest of me wanted to run away as fast as I could. I succumbed to the last of the three because the Atlanta police sealed off the area as fast as they could.
I think that's when the weight of the situation finally settled in on me. If there was one bomb, there could be more. But where? Supposedly, there were two others found later that night.
