Death toll increases with speed

AUSTIN (AP) — Traffic deaths in Texas have increased 17 percent — an average of 40 more per month — since the state began raising highway speed limits Dec. 8, the Austin American-Statesman reported Sunday.

In rural areas, the parts of the state primarily affected by higher speed limits, fatalities increased 28 percent, the newspaper's computer-assisted analysis found.

Deaths increased 30 percent on rural interstate highways, which got the first 70 mph speed limit signs, according to the study.

At the current pace, about 3,600 people will die in traffic accidents in Texas this year — the highest toll since 1985, the newspaper said.

Some traffic safety advocates said the numbers confirm their worst fears about Congress' decision to repeal the federally mandated speed limits of 65 mph on rural interstates and 55 mph on most other roads.

"It's a nightmare. It's worse than I even thought it would be," said Bob Draper, senior vice president of the National Traffic Safety Institute.

The institute advises companies and teaches safe-driving courses in 20 states, including Texas, where it helps train state troopers.

"But it's not totally unexpected," Draper said. "You now have people driving not just 70 but 80, 85, even 90 mph. At those speeds, when an accident happens, people die."

But other experts, including state transportation officials, said it's too early to tell Statesman that covered about seven months of accidents statewide between Dec. 1, 1994, and Dec. 31, 1995. Texas officials declared it legal to drive 70 mph, and June 30, the most recent date that the Texas Department of Public Safety has entered into its computer.

"A double-digit increase isn't a bad thing by itself," Draper said. "The only thing that's changed in Texas was the speed limit."

From Dec. 8 through June 30, 1996, records showed 1,936 people died in traffic wrecks. That compares with 1,634 deaths between Dec. 8, 1994, and June 30, 1995.

Statewide, the number of fatal crashes increased 14 percent, from 1,450 to 1,650. The relationship between speed limits and traffic deaths has been mixed.

In 1974, when the federal government mandated a 55 mph speed limit nationwide, fatalities in Texas dropped 18 percent, rebounded the following year, according to the American-Statesman.

In 1987, when the federal government allowed states to raise the speed limit on interstate highways to 65 mph, deaths in Texas dropped 9 percent, but went back up in 1988, the newspaper said.

whether higher speed limits are causing more traffic deaths.

"It's possible, but it's only one possibility," said Dev Tulsiani, an engineer for the Texas Department of Transportation.

Tulsiani acknowledged that traffic deaths have increased this year, but said, "We don't know why."

One reason, Tulsiani said, might include more drivers on the roads.

Draper said "the trends are disturbingly clear" in the data analyzed by the American-

Bomb suspects ask for separate trials

DENVER (AP) — Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols, who forged a friendship on a shared distrust of the government, return to court this week as enemies blaming each other for the Oklahoma City bombing.

McVeigh's attorneys argue Nichols was the primary figure behind the bombing that killed 168 people and that McVeigh ingeniously trusted him. Nichols' attorneys say McVeigh's "violent extremism" appalled Nichols.

They hope to convince a judge that they should be tried separately, arguing that jurors will be unable to distinguish between the evidence admitted against each man and fairly judge them individually.

"The cases against Mr. McVeigh and Mr. Nichols differ dramatically in every relevant respect: the quantity and quality of the evidence against each, the degree of culpability for the crime demonstrated, and the character of each defendant for sentencing purposes," said Nichols' attorney, Michael Tigar.

Prosecutors will push for a joint trial at the hearing that begins Wednesday, arguing that most evidence will be used against both defendants and that jurors will be able to sort it out. They also believe a joint trial will be more economical and less traumatic for bombing survivors and victims' families.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch could proceed with a joint trial and instruct the jurors to weigh the evidence individually.

Prosecutors will push for a joint trial at the hearing that begins Wednesday, arguing that most evidence will be used against both defendants and that jurors will be able to sort it out.

The defendants face the same charges: first-degree murder, federal kidnapping, and federal obstruction of justice. Nichols is also charged with conspiracy to commit murder. Nichols' attorney said he will file a motion to have Nichols' trial held in the federal Criminal Defense Bar.

"Education is a very important aspect," Bates said. "This won't be a medical facility in that there's treatment, [but] if we find a person is not doing well health-wise, we will refer them to a hospital.

"Child and maternal malnutrition are major problems. More than half of the children are malnourished either [before birth] or their first few years, and that is a critical developmental period."

Bates acted as the architecture students' client representing INCAP.

Brendan Mangrum, a senior environmental design major, participated in the project. He said Latin America needs health centers and will benefit from the facility's presence.

"The clinic sounds like something similar (Latin Americans) need to have everywhere."

The projects will be on display Tuesday at the Biochemistry/Biophysics Building West Campus.
