THE BATTALION CAMPUS

Honor society convention held at A&M

By CARLA RENE MARSH
THE BATTALION

Phi Eta Sigma Honor Society hosted more than 250 members from across the country at the 33rd National Convention at Texas A&M this weekend. The last time the A&M chapter hosted the convention was in 1976.

The convention's purpose was to make changes in the organization's constitution, nominate new national officers, publicize and promote ideas, and look at the future of Phi Eta Sigma.

Kate McKeon, welcome-committee chair and a junior civil engineer major, said the convention is a great opportunity for members across the country. The convention began Friday evening and lasted until Sunday morning.

Guests were greeted at the Sam Houston Sanders Corps Center for tours Friday.

That evening guests attended a barbecue dinner in the Kyle Field press box followed by a scavenger hunt at Rumours in the Memorial Student Center.

The honor society presented a videotape of a previous induction ceremony at the luncheon Saturday. The videotape provided a chance for other universities to see how A&M inducts new members.

Jennifer Knuffman, a sophomore at Quincy University, was awarded a certificate at the ceremony for being the 600,000th member inducted into Phi Eta Sigma.

Michelle Davis, a convention coordinator and a junior bioengineering major, said the 500,000th member inducted four years ago was an A&M student.

"I think the induction ceremony and the convention as a whole was very successful," Davis said.

Specialty sessions for chapter officers and leadership and motivational workshops were held for members.

A banquet followed the induction ceremony Saturday evening.

Guest speakers included A&M Student Development Specialist Stephenie Rhodes, local merchant

Fred Brown and MSC Director James Reynolds.

Rhodes said development motivation for the organization are vital.

"You have to know your center," Rhodes said. "Evaluation is key to any organization."

Guests attended a breakfast buffet Sunday before the check-out.

Davis said the entertainment and the Singing Cadets were favorites for most guests.

"Most of the universities attended were from up north and don't see a lot of school enthusiasm," Davis said. "It's most people were impressed with our Aggie spirit."
