SCHOLARSHIP

The family of Go Shibata felt the scholarship was a way to have something positive come out of the incident," she said. "The Shibata family has made a substantial contribution to start the endowment." To be eligible for the scholarship, an applicant will have to be an international student with high academic standards who is active in student organizations and possesses an interest in people and institutions of other countries. Anyone interested in donating may contact Myra Winters at 110 Bizzell Hall East. Checks may be made payable to Shibata International Memorial Scholarship.

SAFETY

Wawzyniak said GSC will suggest reducing the speed limit, changing stoplight cycles and adding more overpasses for pedestrians and cyclists. The University supported a previous proposal to make the road a school zone, which would reduce the speed limit to 20 mph during certain times. However, the request was denied because the law does not apply to higher educational facilities. Improving safety around the railroad tracks along Wellborn Road is another concern. Jessica Franklin, a staff assistant for the Texas Transportation Institute rail research center, will make railroad safety presentations — Operation Lifesaver — to student groups on campus. Operation Lifesaver is a program emphasizing common sense, she said. "If you see a train coming, don't cross in front of it," Franklin said. "It's illegal and you could get a ticket." Franklin said people are sometimes in a hurry and do not think before crossing the railroad tracks. "Your foot could get caught under a rail and a train might come," Franklin said. She said TTI plans to present the Operation Lifesaver program to all of the student organizations on campus. "We want to teach students how to give the presentation," Franklin said. "That way they could pass it on at Fish Camp and freshmen could learn to give the presentation to other incoming students." Shanna Collie, GSC graduate life officer and a toxicology graduate student, said a committee is researching the use of Wellborn Road. "Right now, we are collecting facts about the use of the road, like how many people cross and what speeds people drive," Collie said. The committee will present its findings to the GSC for consideration at its meeting Tuesday, Nov. 5.
