Barney impersonators may be fined

Stores face lawsuits for selling look-alike dinosaur costumes

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Millions of preschool children may think of Barney as a lovable, purple dinosaur, but for hundreds of costume shops around the nation he may herald extinction.

Apparently Barney, while extremely amicable to small children, doesn't like imitators.

Several hundred costume shops nationwide are being threatened with legal action by the creators of Barney for selling costume look-alikes from a national manufacturer, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

Four Tarrant County shops received letters two weeks ago from a San Francisco law firm representing The Lyons Group of Allen seeking settlements ranging from $7,500 to $75,000 and the return of all costumes.

Those shops entertaining the idea of not paying Barney his due will be slapped with another lawsuit for twice the amount originally assessed.

Costume shop owners, who usually have much to celebrate at this time of year, are now scrambling to review their options before a Nov. 12 deadline.

Fort Worth's Harris Costume is being asked to pay $75,000 for

"Barney was created to be a wholesome, nurturing and loving character for very young children."

"Just the lawyers' fees will put you out of business."

Susan Elsner Furman, a spokeswoman for The Lyons Group, said the company is protecting Barney's image.

"Barney was created to be a wholesome, nurturing and loving character for very young children," Furman said. "Children should be able to believe in the integrity of the character. Children place their trust in Barney. We must be able to control the actions of anybody in a Barney costume."

But store owners say the lawsuit will leave them in the same condition as Barney's ancestors.

"Do they realize how many shops they will put out of business?" said LaNita Moore, who owns Arlington's House of Make Believe with her mother. The shop is being asked to pay $7,500.

"Will that satisfy them?" Moore said. "Why didn't they just ask for the costume back?"

Everybody's scared to die. We're definitely in trouble. They have the money to do this all the way."

The Lyons Group sued National Discount Costume Co. in San Diego in June for creating a costume, according to information sent to store owners.

It also obtained data on business transactions, including the names of stores that sell costumes. The lawsuit alleges National Discount Costume violated copyright and trademark rights of The Lyons Group.

Because the case is so new, its status is unknown.

Tarrant County costume owners say they bought costumes in good faith and in the way of knowing they might infringe on a copyright.

"They were on the market for five years," Doyle said. "We even waited two years to make sure they were OK. We were extremely careful."
