Miss "A Tuna Christmas" and you'll be sorry, Charlie.

"A Tuna Christmas"

Tuna, Texas is a nice place to visit but you wouldn't want to live there, especially during the holidays. In this hilarious satire, crisis looms and bad taste rules the day. Will the electric company cut the power on the local theater's production? Will anyone be able to catch the "Christmas phantom" vandalizing holiday yard displays? And why are sales so brisk at the used weapons store? This town of 22 Scrooges comes to life through the quick-change skills of Greg Currie and Brent Briscoe, who between them play every role, both male and female. These characters are eccentric, spiteful and ultimately unforgettable as they manage to salvage some humanity amid the insanity. Great fun for the whole family!

Perot staffers prepare for last paycheck

DALLAS (AP) — Ross Perot's presidential campaign offices are closing across the country as staff members prepare for their final paychecks.

The workers are being flown to Dallas this weekend to meet with campaign coordinator Russ Verney. They've already been told to ship their office equipment — including desks and fax and answering machines — to the national headquarters in Dallas, where the equipment will be sold or donated to charity.

The closings do not necessarily include all Reform Party offices. Verney said local officials may attempt to keep those offices open with their own funds.

"Ultimately, the Reform Party members have got to assume responsibility for their governance, their finances, their futures," he said. "Whether they will have the ability to continue paying rent is up to them."

Perot, the Texas billionaire who captured 8 percent of the presidential vote on Election Day, hasn't decided yet whether to finance any future attempts to support his fledgling party, Verney said.

Many of the 41 workers who will get their final paychecks at the end of the month had worked for Perot's United We Stand America group before its metamorphosis into the Perot '96 Campaign. Some have been employed by Perot since 1993.

"Their last employment was with a campaign, and campaigns end," Verney said.

The moves by the Perot '96 campaign are in line with federal election law that requires all campaigns to consolidate assets, prepare for an audit, said Election Commission spokeswoman Sharon Snyder.

"We're liquidating everything at this point and time," said Verney, a Perot staffer for the Montana and Wyoming, shutting down everything he could do to get everything over from scratch.

Ann Saucier, a former member of United We Stand-Ohio who came disillusioned with Perot's shutdown will make the party effort difficult. "He's shutting down Perot and in the process he's shutting down funding to the Reform Party. He doesn't give two hoots. It's about him the whole time," said Perot. "The Republican and Democrats don't shut their parties after each election."

Dr. J. Malon Southerland, vice president for student affairs, said the opening of a new student center is not a consideration.

"We won't be able to build a new student center in the near future, so I thought it would be timely to do a study."

The study will include the potential reassigning of space and a new design.

Powell said the majority of subscribers are faculty and staff members, but she would love to see more students sign up.

University Relations reporters write the stories for the publications, as they did in the past for the Fortnightly newsletter.

"A member of my staff gets this (the stories) all together and I look at it before it all goes out," Powell said.

The publications are delivered to Hotline subscribers mail accounts by 4 p.m. University Relations acknowledges that not every member of the faculty and staff has access to the Web.

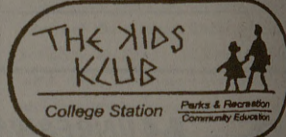

To remedy this, the Aggie Weekly is posted on campus, providing a broad overview of the top eight 10 stories from the week.

Stephenson said the future of the publications looks bright. People are going to be more pleased with the focused, timely news, he said.

"It's working out quite well," Stephenson said.
