Carl Baggett, student body president and a senior accounting major, said the forum will present students with a golden opportunity to understand the reasons behind the increase and the destination of the generated money.

"This is the only time students will be able to address Bowen and the rest of the administration in this way," he said. "I hope anyone who is interested will come out and ask questions."

Baggett said A&M students have come a long way in understanding the GUF in the short amount of time it has been discussed.

"Three weeks ago we weren't even talking about the GUF," he said. "We've had a pretty good learning curve."

Kibler said he suspects many students recognize the need for the increase but think the University should "go get that money somewhere else."

Faculty salaries are normally funded through tuition set by the state. The $2 annual increase negates the possibility of using that funding for salaries. Most other funding is dedicated to specific uses and is not available for raises.

The University's financial services are already low, and will serve only as a one-time increase, not a permanent salary raise.

Bowen said the situation in part to the failure of the raise proposal in September. "This will not solve the problem," he said, "but it is a step in the right direction."

Each time tuition increases the GUF can also increase. The Board must approve the University must hold a public hearing each time.

GUF increase proposal information is available at <http://www.cal/vp/guf/guf.htm>.
