GRADUATION

Josh Golden, CSAB president and a Tarleton State University student, said the board aims to improve communication between student delegates and the regents and to promote student concerns. He said the regents' practice of meeting at different campuses in the System helps achieve those goals.

"Rotating the meetings allows more students to attend and give their input," Golden said.

Golden said the board disagrees with Rep. Steve Ogden's proposal to consolidate tuition and fees into three main categories. He said consolidating fees would lead to confusion rather than clarification.

"[Ogden's idea] inhibits the ability to track specific allocations," Golden said. "We need to concentrate on a market-driven tuition."

He said market-driven tuition would help avoid unjust increases in tuition and fees.

In other business, the Board approved phase three of the project to improve Texas A&M athletic facilities. Phase three is a proposal to renovate seating in the north end zone of Kyle Field.

CAMPUS

Bowen will spend Christmas at his home in Houston with his children and their families.

"I had hoped to go to a bowl game," he said.

The absence of students on campus not only lowers the decibel level, but also gives maintenance and repair crews the opportunity to work more freely.

Mike Goldwater, assistant director for facilities, maintenance and renovations, said the empty classrooms and walkways make areas in need of repair easier to access.

"It's a good opportunity to get projects out of the way," he said. "It's less disruptive to the students and faculty."

Goldwater said the larger projects for the winter break will be desk and light replacement and wall and ceiling repair in the Blocker Building, the Kleberg Animal and Food Sciences Center, and the Heep Building.

HOPWOOD

Following the Hopwood decision, attendance at the EXCEL program has declined as a result of decreased minority enrollment.

"Our (participant) numbers went down considerably," McClendon said. "I'm not very optimistic about what the numbers will look like '97."

McClendon said EXCEL will continue to work to improve the quality of services offered by the program regardless of how many students participate.

"It's an important program whatever number of students come to take advantage of it," he said.

McClendon said EXCEL will be to wait and see how the program will be run in the future, with the number of minority students attending the University expected to decrease. "A lot may depend on how next year goes," he said.
