REFERENDUM

Mayfield said yell-leader run-off elections are a tough issue because the Student Senate does not actually have the authority to change a student organization's constitution. He said the yell leader constitution does not allow for run-off elections.

PLAGIARISM

"We're very careful about not selling copyrighted material other than what we put together," Justitz said. "We reword questions and state problems differently."

The Quantum Cow focuses on teaching students the material instead of just providing answers and solutions to problems assigned in class, Justitz said.

"We don't give students shortcuts," she said. "We teach them how to work the problems."

A+Plus tutoring and 4.0 & Go, two of the most popular off-campus tutoring services, were unavailable for comment.

Oberhelman said the plagiarism issue had not surfaced sooner because the Faculty Senate committee has been working on its recommendation.

"It is a matter of timing," he said.

The complaints were brought up last spring by staff in various departments. A detailed committee report was then formed to ensure complete understanding and clarification.

Oberhelman said the report took nine months of work to get to this point, although he would have liked it to have been available sooner.

The next step is attaching a copyright symbol to the actual notes, Oberhelman said. This eye-catcher would help prevent any misrepresentation.

According to the University Regulations handbook, scholastic dishonesty can result in an "F" in the course, letter of reprimand, conduct probation, expulsion in ex-

However, the Election Commission, a branch of Student Government that implements the rules for the elections, does enforce run-offs for several organizations without such provisions in their constitutions, most notably, the class councils.

If the commission implemented run-offs for yell leaders, they would have to abide by the rules or carry on their own elections.

Chris Reed, speaker of the Student Senate and a senior finance major said the petition Czelusta, Kerlin and other students are reporting is commendable.

"I voted for the referendum, and I support it until I thought about the flaws," Reed said. He said run-off elections would not ensure a majority, which is the goal of the supporting runoffs.

"Until you can put up a proposal that does guarantee that members of a run-off will have a majority, I don't think it should be supported," he said.

and pay $5 to work out.

Students who are not familiar with the weight room or who just want to learn to use the equipment can visit the Rec Center Saturday mornings at 10 to learn how to use the machines correctly.

Lynetta Holloway, a freshman biomedical science major, said working out at the Rec Center is relaxing.

"I work out at the Rec because there's a variety of equipment," she said, "and I like to work out all of my muscles in order for me to stay in shape."

REC CENTER

The most popular day to work out at the Rec Center is Monday, anytime from noon to late evening. If waiting for equipment seems less than interesting, Sunday is the least popular for students.

Judy Cook, the Recreational Center Marketing Director, said students are changing their exercise methods.

"Students are now going to the outside pools more than they work on inside activities," Cook said.

The New Year coincides with some students' desires to get ready for spring and get into shape.

Business has picked up slightly since last semester, but senior associate director Tom Reber said it could slack off in later months.

"All health clubs pick up business because of New Year's resolutions," he said. "College campuses pick up before spring break, but early spring, as the students get busier, they attend less."

The Recreational Center only allows member students, faculty and their spouses to use the facility full-time, but students can sponsor visitors

"It's a small victory, but this is what the members of New Arts Six do: teach Spirituals, preserve Spirituals, and, most of all, perform Spirituals for adults as well as children." Dallas Morning News (Feb. 6, 1994)

New Arts Six was founded in 1986 by six Dallas-based African American women who saw a need to revitalize the musical legacy of African Americans. They will present "A Joyful Noise", a production set at the turn of the century, with six women recounting their joys and sorrows through songs, Spirituals, and poetry.

Partial funding for this program is provided by a grant from the Texas Commission on the Arts and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Additional support for the program has been provided by the B/CS Eagle, the Texas A&M Department of Multicultural Services, and the Texas A&M Chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc.

"As your State Senator, I will continue my fight for educational excellence, academic freedom, simplification of tuition and fees, and more student input on any proposals to change fees."
