FLOODSTAGE

"A lot of times, we become overwhelmed with everything going on," she said. "We tend to look at parts instead of looking at some- thing as a whole. In this exhibit we can do that."

John Campion said the exhibit is clarifying, thought-provoking and relaxing.

"This exhibit appeals to people not only in the arts but in anthropology, astronomy, archaeology and architecture," he said. "Come in and use your imagination."

Clyde Brown, chair of the Visual Arts Committee and a senior environmental design major, said the multimedia show appeals to a viewer's senses.

"I think there is plenty of art here that is totally removed from what we are accustomed to in our daily lives," he said. "And the goldfish are entertaining."

Yearwood meets grateful fan in baggage compartment

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The last time Trisha Yearwood heard from Francesco Maccarrone, it was a scream. The country singer and Maccarrone, an airline baggage handler, finally met face-to-face six months after she heard him crying for help from the cargo bay as her plane prepared to take off from Seattle.

"Thank God for you, or I'd have been in serious trouble," Maccarrone said Monday on the Prime Time Country show on The Nashville Network.

A supervisor had closed the baggage compartment not realizing Maccarrone was still working there.

"We were about to back up from the gate, and I felt underneath my feet that someone was pounding and screaming," said Yearwood. "I thought, 'Maybe I'm just nuts.'"

Yearwood alerted an attendant and Maccarrone, from Tacoma, Wash., was rescued.

He's got friends in NYC: Brooks to play to his Big Apple fans

NEW YORK (AP) — Calling all friends in places: Garth Brooks reportedly is cooking up a ban hoedown.

The country music superstar will play a free concert in Central Park this summer in the only New York area stop on his world tour, the New York Post reported Tuesday.

Craig Konieczko, a spokesman for the city Parks department, declined to comment on the report, but affirmed that Brooks and Mayor Rudolph Giuliani will make a "special announcement" on Wednesday.

"This is going to be huge," said Darrin Smith, general director of Y-107, a country music station in the northern suburbs. "The entire New York area is so starved for country."

Brooks, whose hits include "Friends in Low Places," has not yet announced the date of the concert.
