Miller said the relaxed environment of the SI sessions are conducive to learning.

"It's more like studying with a group of friends," Miller said. "It is also helpful having a graduate student who has been in our shoes for the past few years — they understand things on our level."

Sam Mitchell, an SI student and a junior nutritional science major, said the SI leaders are the most important aspect of the program. She said they are always energetic and willing to go the extra mile to help out students.

"The SI leaders really care about you and want to ensure that you're learning," Mitchell said. "Their goal is to help the students rather than just get through with the session."

Miller said although a larger number of students now are attending the SI sessions, other students do not realize the effectiveness of the program. She said many students are involved in other activities that may conflict with the SI sessions.

"A lot of people see it, at first, as a waste of time," Miller said. "If they gave it a chance, they would take advantage of it more often."

Forcina said, in addition to holding three weekly help sessions, SI leaders should also serve as model students by always attending classes, taking good notes and asking questions in lecture.

He said in an ideal SI session, students interact and discuss the material among themselves, instead of relying just on a lecture.

Forcina enjoys being an SI leader because he is able to interact with other students.

"It gives me the opportunity to be involved in another part of the University I wouldn't otherwise be involved in," Forcina said. "When the semester is over and one of my students tells me they pulled off an A in the class, it is very rewarding. It makes me feel like I am really contributing to the University by helping other Aggies out."

Murphy says no to llama lip service

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — Eddie Murphy is going to talk to the animals, but he won't sing.

Murphy, fresh off his remake of The Nutty Professor, will begin filming a remake of Doctor Dolittle next month.

"It's as far away from Rex Harrison as The Nutty Professor was from Jerry Lewis," Murphy said in Wednesday's USA Today. Harrison starred in the 1967 Dolittle film.

"It would be really hip if they got one of those divas like Toni Braxton or Whitney Houston to do an adaptation of 'Talk to the Animals.' But you won't hear me sing it in a top hat to a two-headed llama."
