Tennis team prepares for Texas

► Aggie netters try to bump the Longhorns from first place in the Big 12 Conference.

THE BATTALION

In a weekend of rivalries, the Texas A&M Men's Tennis Team will play host to perhaps their most hated rival, the University of Texas.

The Longhorns come trotting into town tomorrow at 1:30 p.m., boasting an 18-5 overall record and a perfect 8-0 conference record. While the numbers may be rather intimidating, junior Carlos Tori said the Longhorns are not unbeatable.

"They (Texas players) are very good and a solid team, but I honestly think we can beat them," Tori said. "If we play well and everybody comes out here and steps up their play to its maximum level, we can pull out the win."

While the Longhorns do tend to be a step above the rest in the Big 12, Head Coach Tim Cass said the team will be hyped up for the engagement and emotions will be running high.

"I don't think that getting motivated is going to be a problem for this Texas match," Cass said. "There is not anything in particular we are concentrating on, but unfortunately, Texas has got the upper hand and we can only hope that it changes in the future. I think this match is going to be fun for everybody because of the rivalry."

That rivalry, coupled with last year's performance against the Longhorns, in which the Aggies lost two of three games, may prove to be revenge time for the Aggies.

While some of the lettermen may have revenge in mind, others, such as freshman Gonzalo Anderson, view the match as just another day at the office.

"It's just another match, but it is one of the strongest teams we have on our schedule," Anderson said. "The confidence we picked up off the Baylor win is going to help us, but we need to keep practicing hard, have confidence in ourselves, and prove to ourselves what we are capable of."

Tori said it also will come down to the home court advantage, which will be important in the contest.

"It is always fun to play against Texas because of the rivalry, and the fan support could really make an impact," Tori said. "It could be a very close match, especially if it is a crowd out here. So if the student body and community could come out here and support us, it would be greatly appreciated."

Cass said it will definitely be an interesting match.

"We are going to have to play one of our best matches of the year tomorrow and God willing, we'll be up to the challenge," Cass said.
