Lady Ags fall to UT in Big 12 finals

Despite being in the tournament finals for the fifth straight season, the 21st-ranked Texas A&M Women's Tennis Team was unable to pull an upset against the sixth-ranked University of Texas Longhorns, falling 5-4 Sunday.

"Before the match, I asked the girls to leave everything out there on the court," A&M Head Coach Bobby Kleinecke said. "We worked hard for every single point, we just came up a fraction short."

The Aggies (18-5) now will wait for a NCAA Regional bid, which will be held May 9-11.

"We must be one of the top four seeds in the regionals with this showing," Kleinecke said. "Our chances definitely were helped with this tournament. We showed that we could bounce back from the Kansas loss, and showed we were for real."

A&M field team picks up two golds

While the rest of the Texas A&M Track team was posting a strong performance at the Penn Relays in Philadelphia, Pa., the field events crew was in Knoxville, Tenn., competing at the University of Tennessee Field Events/Multi Event International.

Sophomore Kelli Schrader and senior Russell Nuti brought home gold medals in the discus. Nuti and Schrader both posted NCAA provisional qualifying marks of 190-3 and 162-3, respectively.

NCAA study shows women still unequal

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — While gaining in their long race for equality in college sports, women are still at least 10 years away from pulling even with men, the head of the NCAA said Monday.

According to a new NCAA study, women's programs made gains in several areas between 1992 and 1996, including expenditures, coaches' salaries and scholarship money. But not as much as NCAA officials expected.

"After seeing the results, we are somewhat disappointed," said Cedric Dempsey, the NCAA's executive director and an outspoken advocate of increased funding for women.

In the some 300 major athletic schools of Division I, women registered an increase of 6 percent in total participation while men declined nearly 10 percent.

"If you take (that growth rate) and try to run it out, it would take about 10 or 12 years before we reach equity," Dempsey said. "The results do not reflect the type of progress we thought we were making toward the gender equity issue. In particular, we were disappointed in terms of the participation increase."

The survey showed that in 1996, Division I schools had an average of 225.6 male athletes and 129.6 female — a women's increase of 18 per school from 1992, the last year surveyed. Much of the discrepancy is because of football, which women do not play.

What does that say about a society in which a man constantly has to reiterate his sincere apology, when a man cannot stand on his word alone?

Zoeller's refusal to play again until he has the opportunity to sit down with Woods is nothing more than a public relations move to appease the media. One must worry about a society that must cater to the demands of the media.

Another instance of the media's instigating tactics is the handling of an incident between Baltimore Oriole's second baseman Roberto Alomar and umpire John Hirschbeck.

At the conclusion of the 1996 season, Alomar spit on Hirschbeck while arguing about being rung up on strikes. Alomar was ejected from the game and suspended for the first five games of the 1997 season. Later, in a public statement, Alomar apologized to Hirschbeck for his irresponsible and vile actions.

That should have been the end of the ordeal. Alomar's punishment was set and he apologized for his wrong doing. But the media continued to harp on the issue. Many members of the media characterized Alomar as a cold and ruthless human being. A mere apology would not suffice to reconcile the atrocious situation. Even though Hirschbeck accepted the apology, and repeatedly said he would rather let the issue die, the media continues to stand firm and press the issue.

In an attempt to further right the wrong, Alomar donated money to help pay for the surgery of Hirschbeck's ailing daughter. Last week, when Hirschbeck served as the first-base umpire in a Baltimore game, Alomar jogged out to shallow right field at the start of the game to apologize to him once again.

This all points to media obsessed with creating a politically correct utopia. One must question the role of the media in today's society. It appears they have set sail on a conquest to ridicule any public figure who makes a mistake. After all, every one knows, no one in the media ever has made a mistake.

If journalists stick to the old adage, 'just the facts,' and resist criticizing every move someone makes, then maybe they could shed the current negative image of the press and recapture some integrity.

"I thought I was through with until Oklahoma City," Fulbright said. "But the coaches gave me another chance. Basically, the thing I'm worried about right now is getting into regionals. Whoever they (the coaches) think is going to get us victories and get us to regionals is what I'm all for."

Junior pitcher John Sneed had a strong outing last Tuesday, giving the Aggies five solid starters as they head to the postseason along with Fulbright, juniors Ryan Rupe and Matt Blank and freshman Casey Fossum.

A&M will have now 11 days off for finals before traveling to Lubbock to take on the No. 1-ranked Texas Tech Red Raiders in the regular season finale.
