"That was my stepping stone," Angela said. "I was really shy when I was young, and that really helped me come out of my shell."
Wrigglesworth has continued helping people and contributing to the community since coming to A&M in the fall of 1995.
As a member of the Parking and Transit Student Advisory Board, she helped improve the availability of parking accessible by physically disabled students.
Wrigglesworth also participated in the Branch Buddies program at an elementary school in Bryan, where she visited and spent time with a child every week.
"It's a great program where I was able to spend time and play with children who may have a lot of brothers and sisters and do not get a lot of attention at home," she said.
Angela's mother, Karen Wrigglesworth, praised her daughter's accomplishments.
"We are very proud of her, and she was quite honored," Karen Wrigglesworth said. "She is a very determined lady and she hasn't let the fact that she is physically challenged stop her from doing things."

Karen Wrigglesworth said the MDA has been a supportive group, and the family has been happy to give back to the program.

"We went to the AFL and CIO convention in Austin in 1985, and we spoke in front of 1,800 people," Karen Wrigglesworth said. "Angela was only 8 then, and she handled it (speaking) very well. She was very personable and bright at a young age, and I think that is why she was chosen."

Like many mothers, Karen Wrigglesworth was nervous about her daughter leaving home to go to college.

"I was worried at first, but Angela made the transition smoothly," she said. "She also had a nice roommate, and that helped."

Wrigglesworth said the decision to come to A&M was not difficult.

"The main reason I decided to come to A&M is because the campus is so friendly," Wrigglesworth said. "If I ever run into problems, everyone is very nice. I've never felt uncomfortable about doing anything here."

Wrigglesworth is spending the summer in Houston, where she is baby-sitting to help pay for school. On July 14, she will speak to high-school students interested in attending medical school at a National Youth Conference in Houston.

To illustrate the room for confusion, Haynes showed film footage from the 1950s of dummies dressed in Air Force flight suits pulled aloft by enormous high-altitude balloons, then dropped to earth. The object was to devise a way pilots or astronauts could reach earth if forced to escape at extremely high altitudes.

The black-and-white footage is a one-of-a-kind collection of Air Force film and photos, including a shot of a fully outfitted dummy called "Sierra Sam" standing upright with his arms outstretched over the shoulders of two officers.

The majority of the dummies — which had skeletons of aluminum or steel, skin of latex or plastic, cast aluminum skulls and instrument cavities in their torsos and heads — landed outside military bases in eastern New Mexico, near Roswell, the Air Force report said.

Freshman forward Tim Thomas would be the man, further hastening the upcoming departure of Jayson Williams and Chris Gatling.

8. Golden State — The Warriors need Joe Smith insurance for the same reason the Nuggets need it for McDyess: fear of losing him as a free agent next summer. That's about enough time to get high schooler Tracy McGrady acclimated to the NBA life.

9. Toronto — GM Isiah Thomas really wants McGrady, and he may give the Warriors something to move up to No. 8. If not, look for the Raptors to go for one of the best shooters and scorers you've never heard of — Olivier St. Jean, a 6-foot-6 small forward from San Jose State.

10. Milwaukee — With no general manager hired as of yet to make this decision, there could be some interesting inter-office politicking when it comes time for the final call. The Bucks still need a point guard and an insurance policy at center like Colgate's Adonal Foyle.

11. Sacramento — The Kings face the very real immediate risk of losing forward Brian Grant to free agency this summer. The best fill-in is forward Austin Croshere of Providence.

12. Indiana — Rik Smits, Antonio Davis and Dale Davis are all rumored to be on the trading block, although Indiana would trade no more than one of them. If Croshere is gone, it's Iowa State center Kelvin Cato.

13. Cleveland — If the Cavs are lucky enough, Cincinnati forward Danny Fortson drops this far.

14. L.A. Clippers — Darrick Martin proved to be an OK point guard. Stanford's Brevin Knight might one be better.

15. Dallas — Don Nelson supposedly has found someone and already made up his mind. If it's Saint-Jean, maybe it's Australian center Chris An...

16. Cleveland — Derek Anderson of Kentucky, best shooting guard in the draft, drops this far because of knee problems.

17. Orlando — Kansas point guard Jason Vaughn perhaps allows Penny Hardaway to move shooting guard.

18. Portland — Chris Dudley is leaving as an agent and Arvydas Sabonis' days are numbered. Cousin center Paul Grant.

19. Detroit — This year's top Euro import is 6-6 forward Marco Milic, who once dunked over a parker at a dunk contest.

20. Minnesota — Local product John Thomas, a power forward from the University of Minnesota.

21. New Jersey — Back to the Villanova well for center Jason Lawson.

22. Atlanta — The Hawks should go Bubba Wells Austin Peay.

23. Seattle — If Shawn Kemp leaves, someone has to play power forward. Maybe Michigan's Maurice Taylor.

24. Houston — Needs a scorer off the bench. Long Beach State guard James Cotton.

25. New York — From the same mold as their first-round picks from last year, Cal State-Bakersfield's Kebu Stewart.

26. Miami — This is a true wild guess: Maryland forward Keith Booth.

27. Utah — The Mormon state welcomes a new city, Providence point guard God Shammgod.

28. Chicago — From downstate, Bradley guard Anthony Parker.

Sampras, Gimelstob help to boost American fortunes at Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Wimbledon witnessed the ragged state of American tennis Tuesday, with the notable exception of Pete Sampras and the hopeful emergence of Justin Gimelstob.

Down went Michael Chang, Down went Jim Courier. And as for the whereabouts or future of MIA Andre Agassi, no one had a clue.

Sampras, the most talented and steadfast of his generation, began his quest for a fourth Wimbledon title by beating Sweden's Mikael Tillstrom 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

Gimelstob, a 20-year-old former UCLA player, marked his first visit to Wimbledon by upsetting French Open champion and No. 11 seed Gustavo Kuerten 6-3, 6-4, 4-6, 1-6, 6-4.

A New Jersey native training in Florida as part of the USTA development program, the 6-foot-5 Gimelstob showed the most promise of being able to step into the gaping void created by the retreats of Agassi, Chang and Courier.

Gimelstob surely has a long way to go and much to prove, but he'll have a chance to claim another big victory when he faces 1991 Wimbledon champion Michael Stich in the next round. Stich, who plans to retire this year, knocked off Courier, the 1993 runner-up, 7-6 (7-0), 7-5, 7-6 (7-2).

Kuerten, a 20-year-old clay courtier from Brazil also visiting Wimbledon for the first time, double faulted on the last point to become one of four seeded men to lose in the first round.

Gimelstob punctuated his win with a diving volley in the third game of the fifth set and celebrated with a leap and a shout.

"I felt I was getting a little low on energy, so I figured that would be a good time to voice a little aggression," he said.

Australian Mark Woodbridge ousted Chang, the No. 5 seed, 7-6 (7-5), 3-6, 6-2, 3-6, 8-6 in 3 hours, 54 minutes. Chang, who trailed 5-1 in the fifth set before taking the next five games, had won their last seven matches going back to 1993, and had won 11 of their 13 matches overall.

Greg Rusedski needed only 14 minutes to complete a 7-6 (8-6), 7-6 (8-6), 6-3 upset of No. 7 Mark Philippoussis, a match suspended because of darkness Monday night with Rusedski leading 3-1 in the third set. Rusedski closed out the match with his 27th ace.

"Obviously it's extremely disappointing," said Philippoussis, who had been one of the favorites to win the tournament after beating Goran Ivanisevic on grass two weeks ago to gain his third title of the year. "I thought I could do well here, and I had a good chance, and I'm playing good tennis. But Greg wasn't exactly an ideal first round in a Grand Slam."

Jonas Bjorkman, who was given the No. 17 seed when Thomas Muster withdrew, didn't stay around long. He lost his opener to Britain's Chris Wilkinson 7-6 (7-5), 0-6, 7-5, 3-6, 6-4.

No. 3 Yevgeny Kafelnikov, who lost in the first round last year to Britain's Tim Henman, had little trouble this time, dropping only six games in a 6-4, 6-2, 6-0 victory over Juan-Antonio Marin of Spain.

Marcelo Rios won in straight sets, while No. 10 Carlos Moya took four sets to advance.

In women's matches, No. 1 Martina Hingis struggled to beat Stanford's Anne Kremer 6-4, 6-4; No. 8 Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario routed Britain's Clare Wood 6-0, 6-0; and No. 10 Conchita Martinez beat Karina Habsudova 6-1, 6-2.

No. 13 Kimberly Po, a 25-year-old American, lost 3-6, 7-5, 6-2 to Kerry-Anne Guse of Australia. No. 15 Ruxandra Dragomir lost 10-8 in the third set to Andrea Glass of Germany.

Anna Kournikova, a 16-year-old with a serve-and-volley game made for grass, romped past American Chanda Rubin 6-1, 6-1.

Hingis, repeatedly bouncing her racket on the turf in frustration, needed six match points before finally beating Kremer, an amateur ranked No. 218.

Hingis, who hadn't played a match since losing in the final of the French Open just over two weeks ago, lost her serve four times.

"It's much harder to play a qualifier because they are used to playing matches on grass," Hingis said. "And she's a hard opponent. I remember I played her in a junior tournament and lost from two match points."

Kremer, a Luxembourg native who plays at Stanford University, stretched Hingis but failed to hold serve at crucial moments. She double faulted three times while leading 3-2 in the first set.

Two years ago as an amateur at the U.S. Open, his first major tournament, Gimelstob joked that he was "only seven wins away from my first Grand Slam title." He won one match, then didn't play in another major until the Australian Open last year, where he lost in the first round.

Asked now if he feels he's just one match from the Wimbledon title, Gimelstob showed he had learned his lesson.

"A couple of the guys took me aside real early at the U.S. Open last year and told me that I had better start keeping my mouth shut because I started winning any matches," he said. "You're not going to get that out from me anymore."

When Gimelstob hears people talking about him becoming a champion in American tennis and linking his name to Sampras, all he can think of, he said, is "don't lose, don't lose, don't lose."

Yet, Gimelstob is well aware of the expectations upon him.

"It's been a hot topic that I don't want to have that many good players coming up, which I don't particularly agree with," said Gimelstob, who turned pro just one year ago. "I think it's cyclical, and I think I'm one of the players that has a chance to be a good player."

Of the 14 American men in the draw at the start of Wimbledon, seven have already lost.
