Wakeland's latest release To See the Sun takes listeners to sleep

By RHONDA REINHART
THE BATTALION

Cautious: Large doses of Wakeland may cause drowsiness.

The band's second album, To See the Sun, consists of repetitive melodies, generic lyrics and recurring themes of unrequited love. The moderate tempos and moderate musicianship have helped the Oklahoma quartet produce a moderate album.

The songs are pleasant and catchy, but they lack emotion. There is no feeling in the guitar riffs or lead vocals. For an album made up of tracks about painful relationships, the sound is amazingly upbeat.

Lead guitarist Brad Heinrichs is the songwriter for the group, and it is evident that lead singer Chris Sullivan is singing someone else's songs.

From the opening "la-la's" of "That Again" to the "doo-oo's" of the closing title track, Wakeland presents a chain of similar-sounding songs. The 11 tracks on the album flow into each other so well, it is hard to tell where one ends and another begins. After hearing the album, listeners may find themselves humming one of its tunes or singing a chorus, but it is not hard to do after hearing the same lines repeatedly.

The band members first teamed up as student Oklahoma State University, and like many other college cover bands, started out playing bars and parties. The band has since signed a record deal with Giant Records and has had songs played on episodes of "Melrose Place" and "Malibu Shores."

It is not surprising that Wakeland's music would find success on television shows. The band's style well-suited to providing background music. The lyrics are understandable, and the melodies are common. Nothing in the music would distract from the show's action, but it would provide a mellow backdrop for TV audiences.

Heinrichs summed up the band's style best. "We write pop songs. Three to four minute little pop songs," he said. "Critics can and do slam pop music for their various reasons, but pop is short and popular. There are certainly enough people that enjoy something that isn't angry and bitter or whatever, and I don't see anything wrong with that."

He is right. There is nothing wrong with music that is not angry and bitter, but there is something wrong with music that is devoid of emotion. It is called boring.

Wakeland should wake up and start playing music like it feels like playing music. Until then, the band's sound will feel tired and so will its listeners.

Wakeland
