Fans back realignment

NEW YORK (AP)—Baseball fans support realignment by a 2-to-1 margin, even though many have reservations about losing a century of tradition that distinguished the American and National leagues, a nationwide Associated Press poll shows.

Fifty-four percent of those polled favored the plan that would switch as many as 15 major league teams between the AL and NL, with 27 percent opposed to reshuffling the leagues geographically.

Yet, 48 percent said ending the traditional distinction between NL and AL teams makes them like the plan less. And just 12 percent said blurring the AL/NL distinction is one of the reasons they favor the plan, which owners will consider when they meet in Atlanta from Sept. 16-18.

Owners say geographic realignment would eliminate most games in which teams play out of their time zones, which creates late-night broadcasts on the East Coast and early-evening telecasts on the West Coast. But most fans said they do not care when they see games on television.

Just 20 percent said the TV factor makes them more supportive of realignment, 22 percent said it makes them less supportive and 57 percent said it makes no difference.

The poll of 686 adults who said they were baseball fans or somewhat of a fan was taken by telephone from Aug. 22-31 by ICR of Media, Pa. Results have a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3.7 percentage points.

Many fans said they supported realignment because it would help create regional rivalries.

Under the radical plan being pushed by acting commissioner Bud Selig and realignment committee chairman John Harrington, the New York Mets and Yankees would play in the same division and face each other many times.

The Chicago Cubs and White Sox also would play in the same division, as would the Los Angeles Dodgers and Anaheim Angels. Other pairings would include San Francisco Giants-

Giant's Hilliard out with injured neck

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP)—New York Giants receiver Ike Hilliard, the seventh pick overall in the NFL Draft, will be sidelined for six-to-seven weeks with a sprained neck, coach Jim Fassel said today.

Hilliard sprained the inter-spinous ligament between his sixth and seventh cervical vertebrae when he was hit by Jaguars safety Chris Hudson after making a sliding catch in the first quarter of a 40-13 loss to Jacksonville on Sunday.

The rookie from the University of Florida underwent X-rays and an MRI this morning at the Hospital for Special Surgery-Cornell Medical Center in New York City.

Because muscle spasms prevented some neck movement, a second MRI was planned later today to further evaluate the injury.

"Our hope is when he gets the spasms and soreness out of his neck and there can be further X-rays, then maybe they'll have a little better picture for us, (and) that they don't have a bleaker picture," Fassel said.

Hilliard, who was spectacular in training camp and was a threat to break a big play on any down, will have to wear a brace and rest for the next several weeks, Giants trainer Ronnie Barnes said.

"You can't take a player out of your lineup that you are counting on and it doesn't affect you," Fassel said of Hilliard. "But I have told this team since day one, whoever is out there has to make plays."
