SAT scores questioned

DUNCANVILLE, Texas (AP) — When Duncanville High School released its average composite score for its seniors on the SAT college entrance exam, the results weren't too shabby.

The reported score of 1,124 was the second-highest in the Dallas-Fort Worth area for 1996-97, behind only the Highland Park's 1,153 and ahead of Plano's 1,113.

The Dallas Morning News reported Wednesday that the school's average SAT score actually was 991, near the bottom among 29 Dallas-area school districts — ahead of only Fort Worth, Lancaster and Wilmer-Hutchins.

The higher score was achieved by statistics sleight of hand, the newspaper reported.

The Duncanville school district reported the average score achieved by the top 43 percent of its students, while the other districts' scores reflected all students taking the test. Of Duncanville's 648 seniors, 63 percent took the SAT.

Duncanville schools officials say they weren't trying to mislead anyone about the district's performance.

The scores of the top 43 percent were used because that matches the percentage of seniors nationally who take the SAT, said Karla Oliver, a spokeswoman for the district.

Comparing Duncanville's top 43 percent with the national average gives administrators a better estimate of how seniors are doing in relation to college-bound students elsewhere, Ms. Oliver said. "That's where the whole idea of comparative percentages came from," she said.

A spokesman for the College Board, the independent organization that oversees administration of the SAT and releases scores, said Duncanville's method of calculating the average is unusual.
