Phlatliners spin local mix

By RYAN LOCKER
Staff writer

Texas A&M's small underground following of raves and house parties is contributed to by the Phlat Line Crew, a team of two brothers, Ronnie White (DJ Ron-E) and B.J. White (D-Jabe), plus Will Walker. The three DJs occasionally open their apartment on Northgate for their growing electronica parties. Recent mainstreaming of electronic music has made a name for The Chemical Brothers and brought Prodigy to Lollapalooza. It is these kinds of electronica acts that are at the center of the groove of techno.

at Phlat Line Crew's productions, but these DJs are trying to bring some new grooves and funky breaks that are foreign to Bryan-College Station. Ronnie and B.J. White are not new to this scene, but rather have rejuvenated after the Genesis I and II raves they produced two years ago. These raves were of a larger variety than the homespun "Concentric Groove"-series house parties that have run at their apartment the past two Saturdays. The Phlat Line Crew's Genesis Raves involved $1000-plus light shows and were held in warehouses. They were an emporium of mind candy, drawing thousands clad in polyester, where the DJs are not the only ones who pimp their vinyl. So while some students are still sweating their Robert Earl Keen and Jackpierce tickets, another weekend option to keep in mind is the Super Yo-Yi Fly Productions

Local DJ mixes techno tunes by Bryan-College Station raves.

"Earthbound" rave Sept. 20. This dance promotional company promises everything from tribal drummers to a skate party "Earthbound." And even though the boys at Northgate will not be spinning the Technics turntables this time, students can start shopping platforms and shiny clothing, cause promoters said they expect to draw the biggest turnout of electronica event this semester.
