The AFPC produced 22 reports or the 1996 Farm Bill and did approximately 40 studies. Knutson id most of the analysis was aimed at narrowing the scope of policy options being considered by the agriculture committee.

Dr. Barry Flinchbaugh, a counlor of the Farm Bill, said Texas A&M played an important role in he formation of the bill.

"It can accurately be said that never in the history of farm bills has data and policy analysis had such a significant impact than ocurred with the 1996 Farm Bill," e said. "At the front of the line as the representative farm malysis from the Texas A&M Agricultural and Food Policy Cen-

The AFPC received the Outstanding Policy Contribution Award by the American Agriculture Economics Association in 1997 as a result of its farm bill efforts.

As part of its teaching program, the AFPC started the Texas A&M Agriculture and Resource Policy Congressional Internship Program. Interns are selected by congressional constituent committees to provide agricultural policy expertise and assistance to Texas congressional offices.

The internship program, which is for students in the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences, is housed in the office of the dean. The AFPC assists in the selection of interns and helps in the briefing process before the internship begins.

This is the most successful university congressional internship program in the country,' Knutson said. "This is because our interns actually work on analysis and on the resolution of food policy options in Congress.'

Joe Benningfield, a junior agricultural development major, was a congressional intern last spring. He said the AFPC was instrumental in preparing interns for their work in Congress.

"As an intern in Washington, the Ag and Food Policy Center was an invaluable resource," he said. "Their expertise and knowledge proved beneficial to me in researching various policy options for the Congressman.

Rob Cabaniss, first sergeant of Company C-2 and a junior business major, said the marching techniques can help the teen-agers with their behaviors. "We could see definite improvements when we left and I think they appreciated it," he said. "It helps give students discipline toward getting to where they can follow instructions and concentrate on what they are doing.

The facility, which opened in February 1997, houses 286 inmates but can accomodate 680 teen-agers. Marching techniques and physical training demonstrations will be at an open house for the school Oct. 10
