Astros get blasted

Series shifts to Dome with Houston down 2-0

ATLANTA (AP) — This time, it was not close. In the first blowout between the teams this year, the Atlanta Braves took advantage of eight walks by Mike Hampton and again shut down "The Killer Bs," routing the Houston Astros 13-3 Wednesday to move within a victory of their sixth straight NL championship series. In 11 regular-season games between the Braves and Astros, the margin of victory was never more than two runs — a trend that continued in Game 1 of the division series when Atlanta won 2-1 behind Greg Maddux. "This was a little bit fluky," second baseman Tony Graffanino said. "It will probably be close next time we play." It better be for the Astros' Jeff. The Braves, who got a three-run homer from Jake Blauser, lead the best-of-5 series 2-0 and can finish off Houston with a victory Friday at the Astrodome. "It's nice to be two-up, but it's like investing," Blauser said. "You're not guaranteed results tomorrow because of what happened yesterday and today. We have to push on and punch them out." Hampton, who had only two walks in 17 innings during his final two starts of the regular season, walked four in the first four innings and got worse after getting two outs in the fifth. With the score 3-all, he threw 16 balls in an 18-pitch span, resulting in consecutive walks to Chipper Jones, Fred McGriff, Javy Lopez and Andruw Jones, forcing home the go-ahead run. Hampton, who threw only 38 strikes in 87 pitches, was replaced by Mike Magnante, who gave up a two-run single to pinch-hitter Greg Colbrunn that made it 6-3. Colbrunn's hit ended an 0-for-25 postseason slump by Atlanta pinch-hitters, dating back to the '95 World Series. "I was just trying to be a little too perfect and it wound up costing me," Hampton said. "I probably just tried to nibble too much." Atlanta added five runs in the sixth — four unearned — once again striking with two outs. Fred McGriff had an RBI single and two more scored when first baseman Jeff Bagwell let a high throw deflect off his glove for an error. Danny Bautista followed with a two-run single, though the inning mercifully ended for the Astros when he was thrown out trying to stretch it to a double. It has been a miserable series for Bagwell, who had 43 homers, 135 RBIs and 31 stolen bases during the regular season. He is 0-for-8 with five strikeouts, including three on Wednesday. "Obviously, it's a little disappointing," he said. "But you've got to shrug it off and go get 'em Friday." Craig Biggio, Derek Bell and Bagwell, the top three hitters in the Astros order, have become the Killer Zs, snoozing through the series at a combined 1-for-25 with no RBIs. They have even been outbait by the Houston pitchers, who are 3-for-4. "It just happens to be part of baseball," said Biggio, who has the trio's only hit, a meaningless infield single in the ninth Wednesday. "Guys go into funks." "That could change in a day, in an at-bat," Bagwell added. "It could happen Friday." Tom Glavine, improving his postseason record to 8-9, threw a staggering 117 pitches through six innings, allowing all three runs and five hits. The Braves' bullpen got some work, with Mike Cather throwing two scoreless innings and Mark Wohlers finishing. "We've done a good job so far" with Houston's top three hitters, Glavine said. "Obviously, when you look at this ballpark, those guys are very dangerous. You don't want to let those three guys beat you, particularly Bagwell." The key, Glavine said, has been keeping Biggio off base. "That make it a little easier to face Bagwell when you're in a situation where you know the solo homer isn't going to hurt you," the Atlanta pitcher said. "Hopefully, we can win one more game and not let them get in position where they can beat us." Blauser, hitting .588 in his career against Hampton, gave the Braves a 3-0 lead in the third with his fourth postseason homer. After Glavine singled and Kenny Lofton walked, Blauser hit a 383-foot drive into the left-field seats despite a Wright than two runs — a trend that continued in Game 1 of the division series when Atlanta won 2-1 behind Greg Maddux.
