Suspects hunted in Texas border area

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP) — Two brothers wanted on charges of slaying five other migrant workers may be headed toward Mexico or Texas, an investigator said Tuesday.

"I think these guys are en route to Texas, trying to get across the border," said Maj. Phil Sweatt of the Richmond County Sheriff's Department.

Jose Luis Cruz Osorio, 28, and Alonso Cruz Osorio, 18, are charged with five counts of murder and five counts of robbery. They are accused in a shooting spree that killed five fellow workers and wounded another late Sunday in a house they shared.

The men are believed to have moved here last spring from Austin, Texas.

Investigators are focusing on Texas and Mexico because a Charlotte cab driver told them the pair tried to buy airline tickets to Mexico City or Dallas, Sweatt said. When they failed, the brothers asked the cab driver to take them to the bus station.

The car used to flee the scene was found Tuesday in Charlotte. A cab driver called police and said he had picked up two men who looked like the brothers on Monday.

"They went to a Wal-Mart store where they bought some luggage and some other items and then he took them to the Charlotte airport," Sweatt said. "They tried to obtain a ticket to Mexico City or Dallas, Texas. That didn't work out. There was some problem."

left there and he took the two guys to the bus station. Sweatt said his department had gotten help from other local police agencies in checking bus stations.

Richmond County investigators went to Charlotte to get the car.

Jarrell said Greyhound buses traveling in Atlanta, Montgomery, Ala., were intercepted Monday, but Osorio brothers were not found. More interceptions planned, especially in Western states, Jarrell said.

Although the cab driver told investigators that he did not observe any weapons carried by the men, Jarrell said they still should be considered armed and dangerous.

The men were believed to be armed with a Chinese-made SKS assault rifle and a .22-caliber weapon.

The survivor — identified by the Mexican consulate in Charlotte as Jorge Benitez — was in fair condition after surgery at Carolinas Medical Center in Charlotte. Jarrell helped identify the suspects.

EXHIBITORS

Terri Porter-Gross, a student assistant at Beutel and a senior community health major, said the fair provides students with information that they can use in their lives.

"There is something there for everyone," Porter-Gross said. "Whether it's HIV testing, nutritional analysis or vision screenings, it allows people to make contacts that they may later use."

Porter-Gross said the health center will offer an exhibit where students can test their lung capacity.

"The Brazos Valley area has a lot of people with asthma and other problems," she said. "We are going to be testing lung capacity."

The Health and Wellness Fair will feature entertainment by the Wranglers, the Women's Chorus and aerobics instructors from the Student Recreation Center.

CONFUSION

Magee said the problem was lack of education among the voters, poll workers and the Election Commission.

"Everyone needs to understand that if you don't rank all the candidates, you won't have a vote in subsequent rounds," she said. "There was not a whole lot of time to educate people and it was the beginning of the year so everyone was busy at the start of school."

Magee said the Senate will clearly define a majority in the election regulations if the Senate votes to use the ranking system in the spring elections.

Pat Troy said that other than discrepancies in definitions, the ranking system worked as planned.

"I think the results of the ranking system are a testament to what it will accomplish," he said. "The next date will have broader appeal to a broader number of students which means the officer will better represent the student vote."

Magee said a meeting Sunday at 5 p.m. in 146K will explain the ranking system and discuss what happened in the freshmen elections.

Class of '99 vice president and Senate elections will be today.

MEDICAL

"Most prescriptions and diagnostic changes that exist today didn't exist 20 years ago," she said. "Two decades out of all time and that's just the beginning. I can't imagine a more exciting time in medicine."

Dickey said she encourages pre-med students to continue with their education although they will be challenged in the next decade.

"No matter what your practice is, the satisfaction of a patient who feels better or lives is something you cannot get out of any other profession," she said. "That's something no one can take away no matter what happens with the health care system in the future."

Monica McArthur, co-chair of the women and medicine task force of the American Medical Student Association and a sophomore molecular and cell biology major, said Dickey proves women can balance a family, a profession and a national office.

"Dr. Dickey has a good perspective on being a woman physician because she didn't have a chip on her shoulder going into a profession dominated by men," she said. "She has taken everything with a grain of salt and is successful in all she does."
