BOWEN

Earlier this month, Bowen announced three multimillion dollar endowment programs at A&M's Academic Convocation.

The endowments will be used for student scholarships, the Corps of Cadets and endowed professorships.

Bowen said the convocation allowed the University to reflect on its accomplishments and plan for the future. "There are a lot of distinguished people here and the convocation gives us a chance to recognize them," he said. "People can walk out and feel good about the University."

Bowen also said at the convocation that A&M's primary goal for the next century is to become one of the top 10 public universities in the nation.

Bowen said improvements at Evans Library, the George Bush School of Government and the Mays donation to the College of Business have helped improve A&M.

"I'd like to see us continue to have more scholarships and more endowed chairs," he said.

Bowen received his bachelor's degree from A&M in 1958. He returned to the University in 1961 to get his doctorate in mechanical engineering.

Bowen said the University's appearance has transformed since his days as a student.

"When I got here, I got out a map from 1958 to see what had changed and to get calibrated with the University."

Bowen said his family encouraged him to attend A&M.

"I had two older brothers who had already been here and a father who felt it was the right thing to do," he said.

After receiving his doctorate, Bowen served three years of active duty at the Air Force Institute of Technology at Dayton, Ohio.

He began his professional career in 1965 when he joined the mechanical engineering faculty at Louisiana State University.

Before becoming president of A&M, Bowen was appointed provost and vice president of academic affairs at Oklahoma State University in 1991 and later served as interim president of OSU.

Since becoming president of A&M, Bowen said his greatest concern is the Hopwood decision, which effectively decreased minority enrollment at A&M.

"If we don't have a diverse student body, we don't prepare people for the real world," he said. "The real world has diversity."

Bowen said he thinks the Hopwood decision will not be a permanent ruling.

"I don't think it is the ultimate decision," he said. "I think at some point it will change."

BURNS

Burns has served as the executive vice president for MSC Relations and the MSC Council. He served as president of the Lechner Hall Council and was selected as a sophomore group leader for Aggie Leaders of Tomorrow (ALOT). He has been a Fish Camp counselor for three years.

"There is nowhere that you feel like an Aggie more than you do at Fish Camp," Burns said. "It is a great way to give back to Texas A&M and it is a contribution to the freshman class."

Burns has participated in the Ol' Army Gentlemen's Society, the Residence Hall Association and Student Senate.

Burns said A&M has made advancements in student organizations, athletics and academics. As MSC president, he said he has seen improvement in communication and cooperation between student organizations on campus.

"I think that our programs are going to get better and better," Burns said. "Now I see student organizations working together to augment each other. We are addressing campus unity. We have opened up dialogue between the organizations."

The success of committees and programs drives Burns to contribute more than 40 hours a week to the MSC.

"From a personal point of view, finding time to do everything that I want to do has been challenging," Burns said. "I like to spend time with my friends and just hang out and listen to music on my front porch."

Burns has received several honors for his commitment to the MSC, including the Rudder Award for Outstanding Service and Leadership.

Tim Slaughter, his roommate and a senior industrial distribution major, said he has known Burns since he was a freshman and ran against him last year for the office of MSC president.

"He was my sophomore adviser at Lechner and my rap group leader in ALOT," Slaughter said. "Nelson has a tremendous way with people and I think that has helped him as a leader. He is a very good analytical thinker and he can really dissect the problems."

Jim Reynolds, the director of the MSC, said he keeps the needs of students and the MSC in perspective. "Nelson is a very thoughtful individual with problem-solving skills and insights," Reynolds said. "He is a very sensitive and caring leader not only about performance but about the general well-being of the students."

Although he has to be a task master, he never loses sight of the people. Nelson is an outstanding leader and scholar as well as a leader."

During the summer, Burns lived with a family in Mexico City for five weeks. The program was sponsored by La Salle University in Mexico City.

"The only way to understand a culture is to experience that culture," Burns said. "It is an adventure that makes you gain an appreciation of that culture for travel (in general)."

Last year, Burns traveled to Italy and served as a counselor at the Champe Fitzhugh International Leadership Seminar.

Burns will graduate in May 1998 and wants to work in a consulting sales position, in which he will travel some with the job. He said he has been contacted by several firms.

"It is designed to be fun and informational," Meenaghan said. "There are going to be some great organizations there. Chanelle will be holding a contest for students to create a tradition and innovation design for a (fragrance) bottle."

Ten finalists will be selected from across the United States. Students can visit the Chanelle booth and other booths. Avon representatives will provide information on careers within the corporation.

Today students may audition in a model call to compete in one of two fashion shows at 1 p.m. tomorrow. Ten students will be selected for each of the two shows.

Meenaghan said Glamour tried to increase student involvement during its fourth annual tour this year. The
