The Immortal by Jam

HEARD

"When we lost Brandon Mitchell, Edward Jasper, Pat Williams and Keith Mitchell, people thought the defensive line wasn't as good," Heard said. "We took that criticism and fed off of it. We wanted to show people that this defensive line was as good as ones from the years past. People could say, 'they might be young, but they didn't miss a beat.'"

Now Heard, Rollins and Crowley stand as a link between the great defensive lines of the past and the potentially great ones of the future. With a solid core of true and redshirt freshmen waiting to take over next season, they know that they have a responsibility to the program to get the new linemen ready to play.

"Next year they're going to have to step up and play so we're giving them as much knowledge as we can," Crowley said. "We don't have but five games left, who knows, maybe seven, to get these guys polished up so the coaches can overhaul them in the spring and they'll be a strong unit."

Heard said his teammates' desire to help the program, even after they are gone, is not a surprise.

"Marcus is a guy that cares about this program," Johnson said. "He cares about his team. Playing here has meant a lot to him. To this point, he's done a fine job for us this season and I'm proud of him."

Another group thankful for Heard's play have been the inside linebackers. Playing a position which receives constant double teaming, Heard has helped free up Dat Nguyen and the other inside linebackers, allowing them to make more tackles.

Heard said statistics do not concern him, as long as the Aggies are winning. "I'm one of the guys in the line," he said. "The linebackers get the glory, but if that's what it takes to win, it's all right. Nose guards are in a physical position. If you have them [inside linebackers] to get past me."

Johnson said that Heard's leadership has been a very big help. "Wrecking Crew's resurgence in 1996 was a big deal."

"We need him on the team," Johnson said. "He's done a fine job for us this season and I'm proud of him."
