VROONLAND

Vroonland, who is a member of Beta Theta Phi, said his role as IFC president is to represent the A&M fraternity system to the student body, faculty and community. "I oversee the IFC, which is comprised of a twelve member executive board and voting members comprised of the president and a representative from each fraternity," he said. "Together, we make decisions that will effect the entire fraternity system."

As IFC president, Vroonland said he strives to portray A&M's fraternity system in a positive light.

Dave Deangelous, IFC adviser, said he admires Vroonland's diligence and work ethic.

"He is committed to furthering the Greek community with a vision of excellence," he said. "He does this by collaborating with the IFC chapters, the Greek system and the A&M community."

Collin Comer, a Beta Theta Phi member and a senior accounting and finance major, said Vroonland has a good vision of his goals.

"He [Vroonland] can take an idea from ground level and make it happen," he said. "He has strong determination and can take something from thin air and make [it] into reality."

Vroonland said he wants to stay in Texas and find a job working as a management consultant after graduation. Deangelous said Vroonland will succeed in his future endeavors.

"He is a self-motivated student with great follow-through," he said. "He can accomplish anything once he puts his mind to it."

SENATE

The Blinn Co-Enrollment Resolution also was adopted last night. The resolution supports current University policies pertaining to students enrolling at both Blinn College and Texas A&M.

In other business: The Election Regulations Revision Bill was adopted. The bill modifies existing regulations and includes a clause to ban the use of copyrighted materials in student election campaigns.

The Student Government Association Budgetary Process Bill, which created a permanent procedure to allocate SGA funds, also was passed.

SOUTHERLAND

"If there is a problem that needs attention, Dr. Southerland is right on it," he said. "He'll walk right into the president's office, send an e-mail or get on the phone to fix the problem."

Childers said Southerland is effective as vice president of student affairs because of his dedication to helping A&M students.

"I've often heard Southerland say that he has the best job in the world," Childers said. "It takes a lot of time and effort to find out what students want, but Dr. Southerland has this love for his job as a student advocate."

Childers said Southerland is an unpredictable person, often showing up unexpectedly at student functions or classrooms with University President Dr. Ray M. Bowen.

"It's certainly not uncommon for Dr. Southerland to stop by the student government office and help the Fish Aides answer phones," Childers said. "It's his philosophy, and he does it with a genuine sense of interest."

Southerland was raised in the Houston area, and his family is from east Texas. He graduated from San Jacinto High School, where he participated in ROTC.

Southerland said he attended A&M because of his ROTC experience in high school and his interest in being commissioned. He joined the Corps of Cadets as a freshman.

He graduated in May 1965 with a Gallemore said the tradition evolved from Bonfire practices.

"The University took over the event in 1936 because of trash and stealing materials of hand," he said.

"In 1945, the concept came about, and centerpoles established as the Bonfire."

Bickers said the centerpoles are a time for Bonfire workers to terpole pots.

"It's definitely a nerve-racking time for all of the centerpoles," he said. "People know the centerpoles that we are the main responsible for this centerpoles, and if something goes wrong, I don't really want to be seen on campus!"

Southerland served in West Germany in the military before returning to College Station in 1968.

Southerland has served as president for Student Government at Texas A&M since 1993.

Southerland said he should get as much information as he can while in college.

"I urge students to talk to hundreds of others on this campus that are willing to help. Take advantage during this precious learning time and build a foundation for yourself."
