PROBLEM

"Alcohol problems are hard for young people to understand," she said. "Students are into taking risks because they believe they are young and invincible. We do what we can with enforcement and crime prevention education to help students understand the effects of alcohol and help them make better choices."

A&M groups including Aggies Against Drunk Driving, Students Teaching on Prevention and Peer 1 Educators in the Department of Student Life aim to increase the awareness and prevention of alcohol abuse on campus. The Bonfire Alcohol Awareness Committee promotes an alcohol-free Bonfire and alcohol abuse safety to the campus and Bryan-College Station community.

The Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse at Columbia University in New York City reported that alcohol is associated with missed classes and low grade-point ratios. Researchers at the center said alcohol is a factor in about 41 percent of academic problems and 28 percent of cases of student dropout.

The center also said alcohol can lead to criminal problems on college campuses including rapes, vandalism and suicide. The study said 90 percent of rapes occurred while either the victim or attacker were under the influence of alcohol.

According to the Texas Department of Transportation, alcohol is the prime contributor to motor vehicle and other unintended deaths.

Nearly half of all traffic deaths in Texas each year related to alcohol. More than 1,400 people were killed in traffic crashes last year due to drinking and driving, the department said.

SURVIVOR

Wachsberg said in February 1945, he and 74 other people were loaded in an open cattle car on a train that would move them to camp Leitmeritz. During the seven day trip, only five of the original 75 people on the cattle car survived.

"What we did was throw them (the dead people) over, we needed the space," he said. "Then more people died. I was on the train for six days and seven nights without any food or water. We had lots of clothes to keep us warm because those people that died, we kept the clothes and put them on ourselves."

From Leitmeritz, Wachsberg said he was moved to camp Theresienstadt in April 1945. On May 9, 1945 the war was over, and the prisoners at Theresienstadt were liberated.

Wachsberg said the day of his liberation was the most beautiful day in his life. He said he took a Russian truck to Vraskow, Czechoslovakia, where the citizens of the town recognized him as a prisoner of the concentration camps. The citizens burned his clothes for him.

"If I live another 50 years, I will never forget the name of the village or the people in the village," he said. "They took care of me better than any mother can take care of any baby. They brought me back to a normal person."

He said the citizens of the town also gave him money and put him on a train to Chrzanow.

Wachsberg said most of the people that survived were from the ages 17 to 28.

"Children never had a chance, they were instantly sent to the crematoriums or to labs for research," he said.

He said those who were 35 and older had little chance of survival.

SOL WACHSBERG
HOLOCAUST SURVIVOR

Flora Wachsberg, Wachsberg's wife, said that her husband did not speak about his experiences in the Holocaust until 1983 when former President Ronald Reagan asked Holocaust survivors to tell their stories.

"We've been married 33 years and he never talked to me about [the Holocaust] until 1983," she said. "He (Reagan) said that if they (survivors) didn't talk, their story would be forgotten."

TASK FORCE

"Looking at the environment as a whole we really need to have an understanding of the problems before we move to recommendations," she said. "We can't say that the Texas A&M environment ends with the boundaries of the campus. It extends into the (Bryan-College Station) community."

Sayre said the task force wants to promote a greater sense of self-responsibility among students who choose to drink.

"Prevention [of alcohol abuse] is generally more successful than treatment," she said. "I think previous strengths have been an interest in taking preventative measures on educational issues. Texas A&M was an early proponent of early prevention."

Dr. Dennis Reardon, the coordinator of Alcohol and Drug Education programs, said that greater efforts to prevent alcohol abuse has contributed to the decline in alcohol abuse at Bonfire and a reduction in the number of Minors Possession (M.L.P.s) issued in recent years.

"We need to continue removing alcohol from the traditions," Reardon said. "The traditions at Texas A&M are great. Alcohol diminishes [the value] of these traditions."

However, Reardon said drinking remains a problem among A&M students.

"Students say the right things," he said. "But I do not think that they have put that into action completely."

In relation to students' health, Dr. Janet Kreuger, a task force member and a staff physician at the A.P. Beutel Health Center, said students place their physical health at risk when they abuse alcohol.

Kreuger said moderate drinking and not elimination of drinking is the foundation to ensuring a healthier lifestyle.

"The task force aims to reduce alcohol abuse," she said. "We are not trying to cut out alcohol use."
