Wylie said that some students may abuse the program, and let resentment about a grade get in the way of the program's goals.

"A student might be angry over a grade they received in a class, and use this forum to vent their frustrations," he said. "In my mind, no good thing can come from this program, and I think the risks of getting good results are just too hazardous to take."

Wylie said Texas A&M should look to other universities to find ways for students to express their opinions about classes and professors.

"We could look for other alternatives to this program, other models of different forums that don't run the risk of putting a wedge between the student and faculty groups, something with a more positive environment," he said.

SAFETY

On Nov. 18, Rakhi Roy, a graduate student in the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education programs, will speak about the law involved with alcohol at 8:30 p.m. in 301 Rudder.

Roy said she will address the legal implications of alcohol consumption and alcohol abuse, as well as the emergence of date rape drugs including Rohypnol and GHB.

"I would hope that students can learn how to be responsible and to take care of themselves and others," Roy said. "Alcohol does not have to be a problem. I want to make women aware of implications [of alcohol use] but not paranoid."

Margaret Griffith, the health and education coordinator of the A.P. Beutel Health Center, will discuss sex in the '90s at 8:30 p.m. Nov. 19 in 228 MSC.

Griffith said sex in the '90s come increasingly risky with methods, status of currently transmitted diseases and (unprotected pregnancies)," Griffith said. "The of sexually transmitted disease ward. Texas A&M is no exception."

Griffith said students often consider themselves immune to and pregnancy. She said the planned sexual activity is conducted with alcohol use.

"One of the biggest problems under the influence," Griffith said. "People lack the reasoning the cognitive abilities to think what they are doing."

Sherry Hostetter, assistant director of the Brazos County Rape Crisis Center, will speak about a presentation at 8:30 p.m. Nov. 19 in 404 Rudder.

PUERTO RICAN

Author Piri Thomas will speak Tuesday about how he has surpassed problems with racial and social identity.

Ana Costas-Ayala, delegate to the association and a senior Spanish major, said Thomas had identity problems because his father is Cuban and his mother is Puerto Rican. Thomas' speech will tell how he found self-acceptance and recovered from his confusion.

Puerto Rican Association members said these speakers are not just for the benefit of Puerto Ricans. All students are invited to attend the events during the week.

Shakira Cruz, public relations correspondent for the Puerto Rican Student Association and a senior accounting major, said all students can benefit from the speakers this week.

"The speakers are positive role models who will speak on important topics all races can apply to, not just Puerto Ricans," Cruz said.

Other events this week include a movie on Wednesday, free salsa dance lessons on Thursday and a Puerto Rican party on Friday to end the week of festivities.

For more information on the week's events, students can visit the Puerto Rican cultural display in the MSC Monday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

CAREER

"When you assume your obligations as a lawyer, you are not a mouthpiece for one segment of society."

Wes Dickerson, a junior agricultural development major, said he entered the symposium with an interest in both business and law.

"I was (debating) between an MBA and a law degree," Dickerson said. "I made up my mind at the symposium to pursue law. Judge Kent presented such a convincing argument on the ethics of law."

On Nov. 15, students interested in law attended discussions in the morning and those interested in business attended afternoon sessions. The round table speakers, of which many received their undergraduate degrees from Texas A&M, provided critiques of students' resumes during the symposium.

Michelle MacMahon, a member of MSC/MBA LAW Symposium Committee and a sophomore kinesiology sports management major, said the speakers provided a more realistic view of their work.

"The speakers were down-to-earth," MacMahon said. "They gave insight on personal experiences, information and advice."

They can really inspire you. Additionally, MSC/MBA LAW Symposium Committee promoted its annual trips during spring semester.

Paul Henry, an associate professor of the MSC, said that about students will travel to the northeast part of the United States in 10 students will travel to southwest part Jan. 11-18. These students will focus on career development opportunities by visiting leading law schools and business schools in the United States.

Henry said he will travel to students on the northeast this year.

"We will sit in MBA and law school classes in schools including Harvard, Columbia and New York University," Henry said. "We'll have meetings with the administration staff, the faculty and sit in classrooms (of these schools). We stay with families who are attending the school or former students."

During the same week, Henry said that another group of students will travel to the southwest part of the United States to visit top business and law schools.

"Their first stop is Thunderbolt International Management School in Thunderbird, Arizona," Henry said. "They then travel to UCLA, USC, University of California at Berkeley and Stanford."
