Newton reclaims stolen paintings

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Wayne Newton is claiming ownership of several famous paintings seized during a drug sting two years ago, saying they had been stolen from his estate. The claim came as a surprise to the Drug Enforcement Administration, which was going to have the paintings sold at auction and is demanding the singer prove ownership. The paintings were received as payment by undercover agents making a cocaine sale.

The cache of artwork included Renoirs, Dalis and a Matisse.

The former Las Vegas headliner didn't return calls Monday to his Branson, Mo., theater.

Urich dedicates $12 Mill facility

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A robust-looking Robert Urich offered a message of hope as he dedicated a $12 million cancer institute.

"Cancer is a survivable disease," said the "Spenser: For Hire" star, who has survived a yearlong battle with synovial sarcoma, a rare cancer that affects the joints. "It cannot destroy hope. It cannot destroy love."

The Good Samaritan Medical Center's new facility can treat up to 200 people a day. Twenty-seven patients at one time can have chemotherapy.

On Sunday, Urich told the crowd of 500 that he had made great strides since his own chemotherapy treatment.

"I had my first major haircut in almost a year," he added.

Brock too liberal for The Spectator

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Spectator has fired one of the conservative magazine's star writers, David Brock, who savaged Anita Hill and President Clinton, then let down his fans by writing a sympathetic biography of Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Spectator editor R. Emmett attributed the dismissal to personal concerns.

"We can't sustain the high price we were paying him. I haven't gotten a lot of pieces out of him," Times in Monday's Washington Post.

Brock said the Spectator thought he was no longer useful when he strayed from the party line. He criticized the conservative magazine as being too scandal-oriented.
