Water, water everywhere

Evan Zimmerman, a senior ocean engineering major, works on an experiment in the hydro lab Tuesday. The project is a simulation of the west Galveston coastline. Their 1/115 scale coastline is hit with simulated waves from the wave machine, and take measurements to record the effects of the waves over time. They then determine whether the man-made reef they have built is effective.

Bush disappointed that Saddam is still in power

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Former President George Bush acknowledges he's disappointed the United States is dealing with another crisis involving Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein six years after the Persian Gulf War.

"Some people ask me, 'Why didn't you go in and get him?'" Bush said at a news conference Monday at the George Bush Presidential Library and Museum in College Station.

"The job was to end the aggression, and we did it," he told the Bryan-College Station Eagle.

"But am I happy he's there? No. He's testing us. He's testing the United Nations," Bush said of Saddam, who provoked a standoff with the United States by expelling American members of the U.N. arms inspection team.

Pursuing Saddam after Iraq had been forced out of Kuwait could have shattered the international coalition he assembled after Iraq's 1990 invasion, Bush said.

The international coalition in 1991 included some Arab states. But the United States has had a more difficult time gaining Arab support for military force in the current crisis involving U.N. weapons inspections.

"I'd like to see them more on board," Bush said. "I don't know the intricacies of the diplomacy anymore so I don't honestly know what has transpired between the state department, the White House, our Arab friends. But it is important that they be with us in this."

Bush said he will support President Clinton whatever he does to resolve the crisis.

"I would hope that he would be able to attract other nations to back us, to be with us in whatever actions were necessary," he said.

"When you're dealing with the possibility of producing weapons of mass destruction, it involves the whole world, and we better be strong and firm in making him comply with international law," he said.

Their name may sound Ivy League, but their facts are strictly bush league.

You'd think a test prep company could get its facts straight. Too bad that's not always the case with The Princeton Review. The Princeton Review's MCAT score improvement claims are so flimsy, the company hasn't made its supporting "study" public. And, of course, The Princeton Review has no affiliation whatsoever with Princeton University, or any other university.

The fact is, Kaplan works so well that more students have chosen our courses than all other national test prep companies combined.
