PHOENIX (AP) — Rookie Saunders, part of the Florida Marlins' rotation in their run to the World Series championship the overall No. 1 pick by the Tampa Bay Devil Rays today in the American League Baseball's expansion draft.

The Arizona Diamondbacks followed by taking 25-year-old pitcher Brian Anderson, an effective reliever for the Cleveland Indians in the World Series.

The two choices began with the sure to be a wild day for baseball. Once both teams were finally choosing their 35 players — at 11 p.m. EST — there was expected to be a flurry of trades that would include Pedro Martinez, Tim Lincecum and maybe Matt Williams.

Arizona didn't even want to show every other major league team it means business. The team Diamondbacks made an splash, signing free agent star Jay Bell to a $34 million, year contract Monday.

"We've made a $300 million investment to get into baseball and I think this signing of Jay Bell is indicative of our commitment to put a winning team on the field," Diamondbacks chief executive officer Jerry Colangelo said.

"Whatever we do isn't something that's going to have us torn down and sold," Colangelo said in a clear reference to the sale of the World Series champion Florida Marlins.

The Diamondbacks were the only team in motion.

The Boston Red Sox appeared to be on the brink of trading Pedro Martinez, the NL Cy Young winner from the Montreal Expos. But Martinez may have shaken up the equation when he told the Expos he would not sign a long-term contract with Boston.

Martinez, eligible for free agency after next season, and his agent Bob Gilhooley, spoke with Expos general manager Jim Beattie on Monday. Beattie told Martinez trade had not been completed, according to a person who spoke on the condition he not be identified.

Martinez, in turn, told Beattie he had no interest in the Red Sox.

"Pedro made it very clear he would not sign a long-term contract with Boston," the source said. "He indicated to Beattie certain clubs did not want to go to."
