WEBSTER

"In recruiting, you want the best players and most highly rated coaches put their best players tailback," Slade said. "Somebody you take him as a defensive player. A lot of it is mentality. At tailback you have to be a tough football player to be good."

Toughness is something lacking in Webster's game. Defensive coordinator Mike Hankins said Webster's strength lies in tackling ability and his knack for making plays.

"Any time you've got a great special teams player who's got toughness and effort with the ability to make plays, he's going to have confidence," Hankins said. "Playmakers on special teams can be playmakers on defense and Jason has definitely improved. Secondary is a position where you have to have experience to be good. There's no substitute for experience."

While seeing action in almost every game last year on special teams, Webster earned his first start against Oklahoma State last year after Shun Horn went out with an injury.

Webster said he was excited about his first collegiate start. He settled down once he walked onto the field. He got his first career interception in that game and gained the confidence that allowed him to be a reliable starter this year.

"There are areas that I could improve in, but that will happen as I play more," Webster said. "When I came here, discipline and focus weren't lacking, but they weren't always on my mind. Sometimes I let excitement get the way of my focus."

Webster has developed into a quiet leader in the secondary, one who leads by example, not with words.

However, when game time arrives and the players take the field, Webster's toughness will speak volumes to any opponent willing to listen.
