Agreement reached in global-warming talks

KYOTO, Japan (AP) — America's top negotiator at the global warming talks was exhausted but happy Thursday: Three days of around-the-clock bargaining had brought home almost everything the president wanted.
 Everything, that is, but one key provision that more than any other could spell doom for the new treaty on curtailing greenhouse gas emissions when it comes up for ratification in Congress.
 While U.S. negotiators got their way in most major provisions of the new Kyoto Protocol, which establishes caps on greenhouse gas emissions by industrial countries, they failed to get a provision that would also have brought developing nations on board, although only on a voluntary basis.
 "This is perhaps the most single disappointment and regret," the negotiator, Stuart Eizenstat, said Thursday as an agreement on the new treaty was announced, concluding what he called some of the "most complex international negotiations" he'd ever participated in.
 Later, President Clinton, commenting on the agreement, also expressed disappointment in how the treaty deals with developing countries.
 "It is essential that these nations participate in a meaningful way if we are to truly tackle this global environmental challenge," Clinton said.
 The developing nations issue could also threaten U.S. participation if it is not resolved in negotiations next year.
 Already the Senate, in a 95-0 vote, has approved a resolution that says it will not accept a global warming treaty that does not also require developing countries such as China and India to make a binding commitment to curtail greenhouse gases.

 Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., a co-sponsor of the resolution, let it be known the new treaty violates that standard. Another co-sponsor, Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., was more blunt.
 "There's no way we'll even be close in the Senate to ratifying this agreement. We will kill this if the president signs it," Hagel, a congressional observer at the Kyoto talks, told reporters.
 The binding commitments for nations to reduce carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases — 6 percent to 8 percent below 1990 levels — applies only to industrial countries, including the United States, Japan, and the European Union.
 Although it is understood that at some point developing nations will also make emissions reductions, they argued they shouldn't be required to take any action now, since most of the gases currently in the atmosphere were put there by Europe and the United States.
 In the final hours of debate, the provision that would have allowed voluntary involvement of developing countries was dropped at the insistence of China and several other nations.
 U.S. opponents of the treaty have singled out the developing nations dispute in their attacks on the accord. An industry coalition has run ads on U.S. television for months asking why Americans should make sacrifices to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases when economic competitors like China and India do not.
 "Every time we've tried to improve the American environment in the last 25 or 30 years, somebody has predicted that it would wreck the economy," Clinton said Thursday in Miami.

IRA meets with Prime Minister in London for first time in 76 years

LONDON (AP) — Punching the air in triumph Thursday and declaring it a "moment in history," Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams became the first political ally of the IRA to meet a British prime minister in London in 76 years.
 Protesters shouted "Murderer!" through the railing gates at the end of Downing Street as Adams' Sinn Fein delegation left Prime Minister Tony Blair's official residence after the one-hour meeting.
 "In many ways, the engagement can be described as a moment in history," Adams told more than 100 reporters outside the prime minister's office. "All of the hurt and grief and division that has come from British involvement in Irish affairs has to end."
 Just yards away, supporters waved the green, white and orange tricolor — the Irish flag, a favorite Irish Republican Army emblem — and chanted in support.
 The meeting appeared to have made no substantive difference to the talks in Belfast, where negotiators, including Sinn Fein envoys, are supposed to agree on a new political deal for the British-run province of Northern Ireland by May.

 But it was heavy with symbolism, underlining in many Protestant eyes the IRA's big coup — getting into the negotiations through Sinn Fein without surrendering weapons.
 Aides said Blair sat opposite Adams at the Cabinet table, looked him directly in the eye and asked if Sinn Fein and its ally, the IRA — which has observed a cease-fire since July — were truly committed to peaceful means. Adams said they were.
 "When people say to me, 'How can you meet Sinn Fein and Gerry Adams?', I say to them, 'If you are not prepared to sit down and talk — provided they obey the same rules as everybody else in coming into the process — then you will never move it forward,'" Blair said in a Sky TV interview after the meeting.
 Leaders of the pro-British Protestant majority in Northern Ireland reacted with both suspicion and outright fury after TV news repeatedly ran pictures of Sinn Fein's seven-member delegation posing on the steps of 10 Downing St.
 The entrance is a few hundred yards from where the Catholic-based IRA landed mortars in 1991. One shell thudded into the back garden of Downing Street while Blair's predecessor, John Major, was holding a Cabinet meeting, though no one was injured.
 That attack was the second IRA attempt in the past 15 years to kill a British prime minister. In 1984, Margaret Thatcher escaped injury when the IRA bombed a Brighton hotel where she and most of her Cabinet were staying, killing five people.
 The last time an IRA leader was in Downing Street was 1921, when Michael Collins met David Lloyd George for treaty negotiations that led to partition: The six counties that make up predominantly Protestant Northern Ireland remained part of the United Kingdom, while the other 26 counties formed what is now the Irish Republic.
 On Thursday, the main Protestant party, the Ulster Unionists, predicted the IRA will return to violence within months, and rejected a renewed suggestion from Sinn Fein that its leader, David Trimble, meet Adams.
 "It was a significantly good moment for the IRA ... the epitome of the ballot-box card that they play along with the gun," Ulster Unionist spokesman Ken Maginnis said.
 The Rev. Ian Paisley, leader of the smaller, more hard-line Democratic Unionist Party, declared of Adams's deputy, Martin McGuinness, "If he wants peace, let him surrender

Adams
