Brazilian pre-teen idol announces unwed pregnancy

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — When it comes to kiddie television, Brazilian superstar Xuxa is no Mr. Rogers.

A former centerfold model, Xuxa drew mobs of fans to her TV shows for children. Blond and leggy in hot pants and thigh-high leather boots, she would emerge from a flying saucer, blowing kisses to a sea of screaming, sobbing youngsters.

That was a decade ago, and the show made Xuxa Meneghel an idol of a generation. While she has toned down the sexpot image, Xuxa continues to break taboos.

Brazil has been buzzing about her since just before Christmas, when she and her boyfriend, Luciano Szafor, were guests on a national TV variety show. Xuxa dropped a bombshell: She is pregnant.

The audience cheered and applauded. No one mentioned marriage, a natural question in this Roman Catholic country.

Szafor apparently had only a cameo role in Xuxa's production.

"No matter what happens between Luciano and me, now I will have someone who is mine alone," Xuxa said.

The news set all Brazil talking. "She's wrong," says Pammella Rocha Moreira, a sixth grader. "It's not important to get married, but how is she going to raise the baby without a father?"

"It was the worst possible example, especially for someone in her position," says Valdecir Pinto de Souza, a barber. "But this is Brazil, anything goes." Szafor, a model and budding actor, said he and Xuxa are happy with the arrangement.

Businessman Gabriel Szafor said he did not like seeing his son treated like a "luxury stud." Luciano's mother, socialite Elizabeth Szafor, told him he was behaving like "an idiot."

Xuxa claimed she was misunderstood, but her protest didn't convince many people. For she had spoken about going to a sperm bank, less her Prince Charming came along.

Besides, the "Queen of the little folks" reach the top by following convention.

As a teen-age fashion model, Xuxa shot to fame when she moved in with soccer legend Pelé in 40-something. At 18, she was posing nude for magazines and winning steamy beauty pageants.

She even made a blue movie in which she played a governess who treated her young charges with exceptionally tender loving care. Today the movie is a collector's item. In an attempt to brush her past after her TV career took off, she bought up copies of the movie and went to block any showings.
