Public, private programs join to provide AIDS drugs

AUSTIN (AP) — State health officials announced a public-private program Tuesday that they say will help people with the virus that causes AIDS to cope with the high costs of new drug therapies.

The Texas Department of Health, which has about $4 million to buy drugs for people with HIV and AIDS who can not afford them, said the American AIDS Foundation has pledged to raise matching funds to make certain everyone eligible gets access to treatment.

New drug combinations — frequently called "cocktail therapies" — are prolonging the lives of people with the human immunodeficiency virus.

"For the first time in years, people with HIV and those who love them are daring to plan for longer, happier futures. We are determined to see that anyone who needs these drugs gets them," said Jim Powell, president of the nonprofit AIDS foundation.

The drugs are expensive, officials said. Costs per patient can add up to $9,000 to $15,000 a year.

Many people can cover the costs by insurance, personal income or by federal and state programs for the needy or desperately ill. But some patients still are left without the medicines.

"Without the private matching dollars provided by the American AIDS Foundation, the state's ability to help everyone who needs our assistance would be greatly limited," said Dr. William Archer, state health commissioner.

"The foundation's support will help us reach Texans who need our help," he said.

In Texas, about 16,000 people are living with AIDS and an estimated 50,000 are infected with the virus.

The Health Department said hundreds of Texans with HIV are, at any given time, not able to obtain the life-saving medications. Often they cannot get these drugs through disability insurance and cannot obtain private insurance, yet they aren't poor enough or sick enough to be eligible for assistance programs.

"... people with HIV and those who love them are daring to plan for longer, happier futures."

Close friend of Clinton family testifies to jury

WASHINGTON (AP) — Compelled to tell his story to a grand jury, Vernon Jordan spent a full day Tuesday answering prosecutors' questions about his efforts to help Monica Lewinsky and predicted afterwards his "enduring friendship" with President Clinton will survive.

The first of the three major figures in the investigation to give testimony, the Washington super lawyer said he had answered all the questions posed to him behind closed doors but was told to return Thursday.

Jordan, a longtime friend, confidant and golfing companion of the president, declined to say what he told Kenneth W. Starr's investigators about the relationship between Clinton and Lewinsky.

"I answered all of their questions truthfully and completely, to the best of my ability," said Jordan, whose efforts to find Lewinsky a job and a lawyer in late December and early January landed him in the middle of the controversy.

His lawyer, William Hundley, told a reporter that Jordan had been taken through a "slow, step by step" interrogation. But he did not elaborate.

Jordan, however, did seek to minimize speculation that the protracted investigation had "cast doubt on my friendship with President Clinton."

"Let me reassure you that ours is an enduring friendship, an enduring friendship based on mutual respect, trust and admiration," he said. "That was true yesterday. That is true today. That will be true tomorrow."

Starr has been moving toward summoning Lewinsky before the grand jury but has made no effort yet to question the president.

Jordan's grand jury appearance had all the trappings of a major Washington media event. He arrived with a police escort to face a throng of cameras and reporters, with whom he would later joke at lunchtime.

"Maybe if you all behave," Jordan quipped in the courthouse cafeteria when reporters asked if he would give a statement at day's end. His statement was carried live on CNN.

At the White House, aides anxiously awaited the completion of his appearance.

Presidential spokesperson Mike McCurry told reporters he thought that Jordan, Clinton's close personal friend and unofficial adviser, would "absolutely" give testimony helpful to the president.

Meanwhile, individuals familiar with the case said two other figures — White House aide Bruce Lindsey and Clinton's personal secretary Betty Currie — would probably return for more testimony before the grand jury as early as Thursday.

And Francis Carter, the lawyer whom Jordan arranged to represent Lewinsky, is mounting a court challenge to a subpoena from Starr seeking his documents. A hearing was scheduled Wednesday.
