Dallas returns with TV movie

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The gusher that was Dallas still has a few vintage barrels left to give.

One of the longest-running series ever, second only to Gunsmoke, the family saga of big oil and big greed returns as a television movie Friday with its key players little changed.

J.R. Ewing's appetites — for sex, for power, for manipulation — are intact. He's slowed a few steps but he's still a crude ole boy, and Larry Hagman again plays him with relish.

"A conscience is a lot of trouble. It's like a boat or an airplane: If you ever feel you need one, rent it," Ewing said at one point, his eyes sparkling with that J.R. zest that means folks should be watching their backs.

Let attorney Richard Fish of Ally McBeal spout his little sayings known as Fishisms; he's got nothing on J.R.'s capital-isms.

Dallas: War of the Ewings, airing 9 p.m. EDT Friday on CBS, also brings back Bobby Ewing (Patrick Duffy) as the good son and Sue Ellen Ewing (Linda Gray) as the not-so-good (but now more liberated) former wife of J.R.

The shenanigans are roughly the same as in the 1978-91 series: This time out, Bobby and Sue Ellen have control of Ewing Oil and J.R. wants it back. We also get bar fights, cattle rustling and professional women dressed in unprofessionally sexy outfits.

It seems that Dallas is caught in a bit of a time warp, a product of the Decade of Greed that spawned it. Executive producer Rich Heller cheerfully agrees.

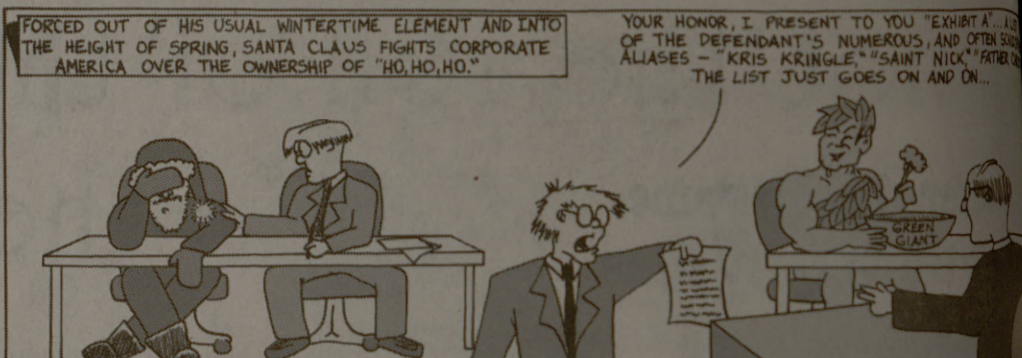

"If you talk about a sexist, chauvinistic, self-serving, self-centered series, that was Dallas, that was what everybody wanted to see. The question becomes: Do you change it? Do you make it politically correct?" Heller asked.

A rhetorical question, it turns out.

"No. Hell, no," he said. That's not to say the formula can't be tinkered with a bit. Dallas enjoys a bit of a wink at itself, stopping just shy of parody. It's clear no one's really going to get hurt this time around. After all these years, the battles do not seem quite so urgent.
