Mark Radulovich, an MBA graduate student and Webmaster for the class, designed the structure and layout for the Web page used by all the students.

Radulovich said the Web site provided information to the students from all three countries regarding topics for class discussion so students could prepare what they wanted to communicate during the video teleconference.

Information used in the class is also made publicly available via the Internet so anyone interested in NAFTA can learn more, and videos of the class discussions will soon be available on the Internet also.

Radulovich said the technology of video teleconferencing, e-mail and chat rooms is an efficient way of dispersing information.

"We're doing something that was totally unthinkable a few years ago," he said.

He said the class is a good way for the three countries to learn together.

"Dr. Eden is really pushing the envelope of how teaching is done," he said.

In addition, students take part in group simulations and case discussions with government policy makers and business executives from the three countries. One special guest has been former President George Bush, during whose administration the NAFTA agreement was assigned.

ABROAD

Students who have studied abroad are invited to answer questions and speak to the participants.

The College of Education is sending 20 students to Costa Rica this summer to work with students with learning disabilities.

Dr. Laura Stough, an assistant professor of educational psychology, said the trip will be a life-changing experience for all involved.

"We're going to gain an understanding of another culture and what it's like to be in a developing country," she said.

Faculty members including Dr. Jane Conoley, dean of the College of Education, will travel with the students to give guest lectures and interact with Spanish-speaking students, she said. Faculty members will supervise the students. The total cost is $1,500 per student and includes round-trip airplane ticket.

The students will receive grants and funding for their study abroad experience. The program is funded with partial support from the College of Education.

Sparks wrote that Morales' statements are sympathetic to the concerns that Mr. Morales is putting his personal interests ahead of his professional responsibilities of representing the interests of his client the State of Texas to fulfill its public duty of promoting higher education for all Texas citizens and the opportunity for equality of law for all universities in the nation.

"However, the court in the board of regents case separated separate counsel if and only if it is necessary to protect the city and its destiny," he wrote.

Morales spokesperson Dale said the attorney gave no comment.

"The court is expressing an opinion. We have no response," Dale said.

Al Kauffman of the American Legal Defense Educational Fund, which is the NAACP Legal Defense Fund's motion to intervene, they were disappointed it was dismissed.

"But at the same time, it seemed to support our concerns about the lack of consistency between the public statements and the representation in court criticism by Morales of his clients' positions," Kauffman said.

Kauffman said the legal team would have to talk with clients, which include Hispanic groups and individuals, to decide whether to intervene in the 5th Circuit.
