Senate majority expected for IRS overhaul

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation to clean up the Internal Revenue Service glided toward Senate passage Thursday in an election-year show of outrage over heavy-handed enforcement tactics and other abuses.

Democratic Leader Tom Daschle predicted a "virtually unanimous" vote for the bill, which the Republican majority began pushing in the House last year.

"We need to pass IRS reform," said Daschle, D-S.D. "We need to get on with reforming it, restructuring the IRS, sensitizing them."

"No agency touches the lives of the Americans more than the IRS," said Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M. Yet, he said, "one out of every two Americans said they would rather be mugged than be audited by the IRS. This bill should reverse that prevailing view."

No detail seemed too small for lawmakers eager to demonstrate their concern with the agency that many taxpayers fear and despise. One provision would require the IRS to publish telephone numbers of its local offices.

More broadly, the measure would provide a variety of new rights for taxpayers, including shifting the burden of proof to the IRS in certain court cases.

It also would provide new protections for divorcees, mostly women, who face collection actions due to mistakes made by former spouses without their knowledge. IRS penalties and interest would be suspended in some circumstances, and a new nine-member oversight board would be given authority over law enforcement and collections activity as well as personnel.

last weekend to urge Congress to send him a bill quickly.

Sen. Connie Mack, a conservative Republican from Florida, said steps were needed to clean up a "corrupt culture" where sexual harassment and other abuses flourish.

A liberal Democrat from Maryland, Sen. Barbara Mikulski, said the IRS moved unfairly against veterans organizations and volunteer firefighters in her state. Any agency that does that, she said, "is a culture desperately in need of change."

Minority Leader Daschle, for one, objected to a proposal that Republicans inserted to help defray the cost of the measure and said he hoped it could be changed before the bill goes to the White House.

But asked if the provision was so offensive that he would urge a veto if it weren't changed, he replied: "At this point, it isn't. ... I want so badly to be able to resolve this IRS matter that I'm willing to swallow a lot to get to that point. But I have to say, this is a lot to swallow."

The cost of the bill was pegged at $18.3 billion over five years. To pay for it, certain foreign tax credits would be limited and corporate loopholes closed.

In addition, though, Republicans inserted an $8 billion proposal that would allow more senior citizens to convert their traditional Individual Retirement Accounts into Roth IRAs.

"No agency touches the lives of the Americans more than the IRS."
Sen. Pete Domenici

The White House has expressed support for the measure but says it will seek certain changes when negotiators for the House and Senate meet to work out a final compromise.

The appeal concludes with a four-page poll on IRS and tax issues and a request to contribute to the "Republican tax reform campaign."

Some Democrats and the Clinton administration initially expressed misgivings about the bill, with its proposed oversight board.

But the political appeal of reining in the IRS was so strong they quickly switched field last year, and Clinton used his radio address
