Opening Doors to Creativity

Author Chris Rogers will be signing her book Bitch Factor at the College Station Hastings from 5 to 7 p.m. on Houston-based author Chris Rogers will be at the College Station Hastings on Saturday to sign her latest book Bitch Factor.

Although college should ideally be a time of productivity and creativity for students, the heat of stress, deadlines and forced creativity so often burns off the juices that make creativity flow.

Chris Rogers, who has just completed her fifth novel Bitch Factor, a mystery thriller set in her hometown of Houston, finds herself confronting the frustrations of the creative process on a regular basis.

In 1982 Rogers developed her own personal method of creativity called ISP, which stands for inspiration, sensualization and perspiration.

"The formula is not only about creativity, but about getting the life you really want," Rogers said.

For the first step, "inspiration," Rogers said she periodically makes a list of all the things she wants in her life and all the things she does not want, as if she only had six months to live.

"I list all the things I want, regardless of sense, like eating ice cream every morning when I wake up," Rogers said. "You have to find out what is important to you and figure out what you are willing to do or give up in order to get them."

Rogers' second step is "sensualization," where she internalizes her inspirations in order to realize her dreams and convey her feelings to others in her writing.

"You have to be able to feel, hear, see and taste those moments that inspire you," Rogers said. "Visualize your ideal day, drawing from the things on your list, over and over until you can hear the music and people murmuring in the background."

Rogers said she believes the emotional mind doesn't distinguish between truth and fiction.

"If the mind can see it, then the mind will start to believe it," Rogers said. "When your subconscious believes in your dreams, it will do things to make them happen."

Rogers said one must still make a conscious effort to acquire what they want, but aligning the subconscious mind with one's actions will often solve situations of conflict within the mind that people don't realize are there.

"Internalizing those dreams and inspirations will also help you take your experiences and turn them into words, to make the reader feel those sensations," Rogers said.

Rogers' book Bitch Factor follows the exploits of Houston bounty hunter Dixie Flannigan, and although Rogers doesn't carry a gun or track down criminals, she draws on prior experiences to make the situations she writes about seem real to the reader.

"I have to know how Dixie feels, so I draw on the times I have felt fear — I go back and relive those experiences to be able to put them on the page.

The third step, "perspiration," is often where people fail.

"There are no free rides—you have to take actions every day. You have to have a plan," Rogers said. "There are people who want to write a book, and then five years later they still haven't done anything. You have to sit down and write to make it happen. Write a page a day, and in a year you'll have a book."

Music Reviews

by Chris Martin

formed and produced the album on his cassette eight-track, through garage indie pop, electronica and everything in between. Can you save bedroom indie pop from its saturated pretentiousness? Definitely. No one can listen to this album and not have songs like "Bostonians," "Five Minutes," or "Ponyoak" take up permanent residence in the brain along with "Bohemian Rhapsody" and the song to "Gilligan's Island."

premonition
John Fogerty
Reprise Records

John Fogerty, God bless him, sure wrote some mighty fine songs in his Creedence Clearwater Revival days and solo career — "Have You Ever Seen the Rain," "Down on the Corner," "Centerfield," "Bad Moon Rising," "Proud Mary," the list goes on and on — and this album collects a fine batch of them live in concert. But despite all his songwriting talent, Fogerty really falls short when it comes to live performance. Namely, all his songs sound exactly they do on record. There's no point in owning a live CCR album, this is no exception. Even the potentially bombastic "Who'll Stop the Rain" falls flat. Find it on an R.E.M. bootleg instead and hear it out the way it should be.

Graham Smith is the Coolest Person Alive
Kleenex Girl Wonder
Mouthfull of Cake

Teenage wunderkind Graham Smith, a little younger than the members of the band, a little less egotistical than the members of the band — well, that one's a stretch — turned out one of the most creative and catchy albums of recent memory. Smith wrote, produced and performed the album on his cassette eight-track, through garage indie pop, electronica and everything in between. Can you save bedroom indie pop from its saturated pretentiousness? Definitely. No one can listen to this album and not have songs like "Bostonians," "Five Minutes," or "Ponyoak" take up permanent residence in the brain along with "Bohemian Rhapsody" and the song to "Gilligan's Island."
