British background. No, they aren't the Spice Girls — they are the Teletubbies.

The Teletubbies are a tribe of odd-looking creatures who have migrated across the Atlantic to these shores.

Tinky Winky, Dipsy, Lala and Po are their handles. Besides the odd names, each Teletubbie has a television screen in their stomach. When the magic angel dustspewing pinwheel signals, their stomach screens flash various images that effects the Tubbies current emotional states.

Not that it makes for much of a change in their personalities, since they seem to always be as high as kites.

The communal pinwheel flashes and spins like a PlayStation in washing machine. The Teletubbies' response to this stimulation is a reaction somewhere between severe epileptic fits and and dope fiend hysteria.

"They're doing a lot of running," Matthews said. She said an effort was made to help the donkeys experience anything new that might be encountered on the race course, including water and other obstacles. The donkeys will be laden with packs of mining equipment for the race, and the training regimen has been working them up to the final amount of 33

The creators of Teletubbies probably thought they had the next Barney on their hands.

Teletubbies has the non-threatening characters and the cheesy production values, but it is different - clearly not another Barney clone. It is like "Sesame Street" produced by Timothy Leary and written by Grateful Dead roadies.

The show is supposed to be aimed the very young, as in fresh out of the womb. The target audience is even given a disturbing centerpiece throughout the show. High above Teletubbie land sits a sun with an infant's face superimposed upon it. The Tubbies worship this this creation like it is an ancient Aztec sun god. The sun face has variety of expressions, which it bathes upon its loyal subjects.

The funny thing is that on the way to becoming the next big thing for kindergartners, "Teletubbies" has become quite popular among young adults.

Maybe it is because of the program's psychedelic atmosphere. They live in a spaceship that has crashed in the middle of land inhabited by periscope-shaped speakers, bunnies and flowers. They eat things like Tubbie Custard and Tubbie Toast.

The appearance of these anomolies in the show is trippier than skinny dipping in a vat of LSD. Teletubbies look like technicolor pears with antennas on mies. Each Tubbie seems to have Along with democracy, The a unique personality, ready for
