Desperately seeking Seinfeld

NEW YORK (AP) —

Everybody knows all you need for a hit sitcom is a stand-up comic with a ready-made persona.

Network execs know it, and they dream of launching the next "Seinfeld" or "Drew Carey."

Producers know it, and they dream of signing the next Seinfeld or Drew Carey.

Stand-up comics know it, and they dream of being the next Seinfeld or Drew Carey.

Viewers may suspect it's not quite that simple. But what do they know?

So the long and winding road to TV stardom takes a looping detour through Montreal each summer, where just for Laughs, billed as the largest comedy festival in the world, is open for funny business.

Phoning from the festival, which ended Sunday, Don Rickles described the drill: "You take young, struggling comedians and put 'em in a showcase, and agents and television people come and see them, and all of a sudden they've got a hit series and they go from $5 to 20 million. And then I run alongside their car trying to get their picture."

Again, it's not quite that simple — though who would dare argue with Rickles? And, granted, just for Laughs did play a key role in fulfilling the sitcom destinies of Tim Allen, Brett Butler and that chap Jerry Seinfeld.

Someone scoring with a stand-up act may go on to lay goose eggs in the series it inspires.

Consider just for Laughs alumni like Lenny Clarke, whose "Lenny" lasted just a few months during the 1990-91 season, and John Mendoza, who flopped with "The Second Half" in 1993-94.

And of course there's Rickles, one of the most enduring headliners as a stand-up, who over the years has bombed in at least three sitcoms.

"It's always been hard to find writers for me in a sitcom," he acknowledged. "What I do, when I do it, it comes out funny. When someone else tries to write it, it comes out overkill."

Bobby Slayton, a stand-up who portrays veteran comic Joey Bishop in HBO's upcoming Rat Pack film, views sitcom-lust with a jaundiced eye.

"I could give a (rodent's hind-section) about having a television show," he erupted with mock contempt. "Why? Because television's just so horrible and so awful. People say, 'What about 'Seinfeld'?' Yeah, and I'd like to win a billion dollars in the lottery also."

"I'm coming up from the crossroads where you see me for that next thing," noted E! Entertainment's "The Next Star" host.

For Gilbert Gottfried, newcomer to the comedy yet never a star in a series springs eternal.
