angerettes cancel trip to Russia

ORE, Texas (AP) — The College Rangerettes have canceled a trip to Moscow this year because of political turmoil in Russia. The group's Russian host said he can't guarantee their safety during the trip.

But shortly before the group was scheduled to leave for Moscow, the college received a fax from the event sponsor, requesting that the girls not make the trip.

"The tension in Moscow because of the serious financial and political crisis is growing and political observers predict (the) possibility of civil disorder in Moscow ... (including) massive demonstrations, etc.," wrote Michael Beglov of the Russian publishing group that was sponsoring the trip.

"Under those circumstances, I cannot guarantee the safety of the girls, moreover a normal atmosphere for their trip in Moscow," Beglov wrote.

Russia is in the middle of its most serious economic and political crises since the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991.

The economy is crumbling, the ruble is in free fall, and depositors have rushed to pull their money out of banks.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Clinton attorneys ask for advance

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's lawyers Monday asked that they be provided an advance copy of any report to Congress from Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr on the president's affair with Monica Lewinsky so they could craft a written reply that would accompany the document.

CLINTON

Some of the president's political advisers have argued for weeks that Clinton's legal team should prepare a separate report countering the special prosecutor's report with evidence prepared by the defense team.

David Kendall, the president's personal lawyer, made the request for an advance copy of the independent counsel's report in a letter to Starr, to ensure "elemental fairness" to the president.

A final report by Starr on his investigation into Clinton's relationship with Lewinsky, the former White House intern, and possible obstruction of justice, perjury and abuse of power could go to Congress as early as this month.

Largest hole ever expected in ozone

GENEVA (AP) — The hole in the ozone layer over the South Pole is expected to be as big this year as it has ever been since measurements began several years ago, the World Meteorological Organization said Monday.

The whirlpool-like wind that develops every year in the stratosphere above the South Pole is very strong, threatening to create a large ozone hole, said John M. Miller, chief of the U.N. weather agency's environment division.

"Out of the past eight years, this is probably one of the strongest beginnings," he said. International measurements began in 1991.

The hole, which forms annually over the South Pole and will probably last until December this year, allows the sun's dangerous ultraviolet radiation to reach the Antarctic. As in some earlier years, it may be large enough that radiation hits the southern tip of South America.
