Starr says inquiry cost $4.4 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr spent at least $4.4 million investigating the alleged cover-up of the Monica Lewinsky affair — a figure that became an instant political weapon in the debate over penalizing President Clinton.

Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, introduced a Senate resolution Tuesday that would demand Clinton repay the cost of the investigation for misleading the country since January.

"President Clinton has pursued a strategy of deceiving the American people and Congress, and he purposely delayed and impeded the independent counsel investigation," Murkowski said. "Equity demands that the costs of the delays should be borne by the president and not the taxpayers."

Many Democrats are already advocating a penalty less than impeachment for Clinton, such as a censure and reimbursement arrangement similar to the reprimand and penalty House Speaker Newt Gingrich got in a 1994 ethics case.

The White House left open the possibility Tuesday Clinton might accept a penalty.

Presidential spokesperson Marc McCurry said Clinton "does not owe the taxpayers" the $4.4 million, but "if there's a serious effort made in Congress to that, we consider it when the time comes."

Starr's office declined comment.

The Starr estimate covers the last eight months of the Lewinsky investigation, without the administration's costs in fighting legal battles that delayed the prosecution or the other aspects of Starr's Whitewater investigation.

There was no immediate vote in the Senate on Murkowski's proposal.

Starr's staff calculated the costs its Washington office incurred between Jan. 15, the date permission was granted to expand the Whitewater investigation to include the Lewinsky allegations, and Aug. 31.
