Grubworm crawls back into

RILEY LAGRONE
 The Battalion

Grubworm singer-guitarist Stephen Blake has seen his band's music have a significant effect on listeners, young and old.

"We played a show in front of the MSC," Blake said. "A group of fourth graders were having a field day, and they stopped for lunch at Rudder Fountain. They started dancing and getting really into (the show). It was strange, but I think they had a good time."

A group of fourth graders worked into a mosh-pit frenzy may seem a little unsettling at first, but anyone who has seen a Grubworm show probably would not be surprised.

The band's shows frequently get a little crazy and always get a little loud. Audiences can get a taste of this craziness tomorrow night at The Cow Hop.

Although Grubworm (originally formed in 1997 from the ashes of Soma and Saturday Night Moses) has been playing gigs around the College Station club scene for little more than a year, the band already has a reputation for delivering hard-hitting, rap/hip-hop sets and bringing crowds to an uproar.

After the demise of Soma and SNM, the original Grubworm was formed as a five-piece band with two drummers.

Just as the band began to capture an audience, however, it suffered a major loss. Stephen Phillip and Jeremy Eubanks, the band's original lead singer and secondary drummer, decided to move on, leaving Grubworm with an unsure future.

In early 1998, almost one year after the band originally formed, the three remaining members of Grubworm picked up their instruments once again and began writing as a three piece.

In the spring of 1998, Grubworm's new incarnation of Blake, on vocals and guitars, Dave Morales on bass and Chris Kline on drums and vocals, returned to the College Station club scene once again, tighter and more focused than ever.

Grubworm's Three Foot was the band's hard-edged for heavy rap songs like "Dag" "Redneck Bitch" limits of the band.

Grubworm is that craziness previously mentioned.
