12th Man International Cuisine offers students better on-campus dining

The Texas A&M Department of Food Services has succeeded in putting the fun and quality back in on-campus dining much to the relief of many A&M students and their digestive tracts.

In an obvious attempt to improve the quality of food for campus consumption, the Department of Food Services decided to give the MSC 12th Man Cafeteria a face lift, and the 12th Man International Cuisine was born.

First, there is the barbecue place called Old Armydillo. Does it get your Aggie blood pumped to eat some marinated animals? Actually, it sounds more like they will be serving road kill.

Old Armydillo has decent barbecue. The sausage links and the spare ribs are especially tasty.

The okra is awesome.

The fries are average (one step above Hullabaloo, but miles behind McDonald's).

I found only two things that I did not like.

One, the corn on the cob was wetter than Sbis's clam chowder. The moisture was not butter but rather leftover water from the boiling process.

Then, there is the Elephant Wok serving Chinese cuisine.

Elephant Wok has by far the best food offered by a non-franchise on campus. Never has such a satisfying meal been eaten on campus.

The chicken and beef entrees were delicious.

The entrees had some green stuff in them, the beef tasted like Teriyaki sauce and the chicken was sweet yet sour.

12th Man International Cuisine

The meal must have been Teriyaki Beef and Sweet and Sour Chicken, but they were not labeled. Regardless of what these dishes were called, they were a pure delight to eat.

The rice is average, as were the egg rolls. The dumplings, however, were a different restaurant people can't find elsewhere. The dumplings were crispy. Overall, the food was good. Last, is the Olla Redota (red pot). The burritos are nothing to write home about. The taco salad tasted okay. Overall, some of the board is not to be missed. The sauce can't be compared to the American one. The service was slow. It was better than the other places. Through it all, we have some fast tacos.

Texas A&M give 12th Man a visit and those Aggie Buds University's part. It is surprising.

Good food and good times often go hand in hand. "People come for good food for you invite them over," Frost said. "What do you do on a blind date? do you do at a wedding reception? getting together and eating together part of that."

The cook plays a central role in memorable get-togethers.

"People like you when you're the said. "It's like you're the man bring Cindy Shellenberg, the public relations director for Messina Hoff, said a wine choice is a suggestion, not a societal standard.

"There's not a snobby reason why you should match wines, like getting colors to match," Shellenberg said. "They pair wines for the chemistry of the foods and to get the tastes to blend. There is no wrong choice, but some choices are much better than others."

This is your last chance to purchase Student Organization Contracts for the Aggieland yearbook are still available!
