Robertson, a cook at a senior agricultural development major, said it is not the point of a restaurant.

"I have learned to cook in places like Athens, Greece, and Vienna, Austria," Stephenson said. "Wherever I travelled, I'd look into the kitchen."

Robertson had no experience in the culinary arts when he started at Remedies.

He said Stephenson has taught him much about meal-making.

"Other than cooking around my place, I had no experience," Robertson said. "I went to the restaurant one night when I was looking to work there and I caught on."

To go along with the meals Remedies offers an extensive wine and beer list.

Diners have the option of tasting a variety of wines, before choosing one.

He said. "That is why the meal must be ordered in advance."

The meals are prepared from recipes created by Stephenson and his family.

He said while there is a heavy Anglo-German influence, the cuisine reflects a worldly view.

The restaurant has a wine-master, a member of the wait staff devoted solely to handling the wine.

Stephenson has close ties to the community and Texas A&M University, guests and staff members are associated with A&M.

Rick Davis, a local attorney, said the restaurant is one of his family's favorite eateries.

"It's really quaint and quiet," Davis said. "The owner is very personable, and they treat you like family."

Davis said the food is among the best he has ever eaten.

"My favorite is the pork tenderloin, but everything is excellent," Davis said.

Stephenson said a gourmand's glee is what he seeks.

"It is a great feeling when people leave saying 'This is the best food I've ever had,'" Stephenson said.

If discriminating diners tire of the impersonal, rapid pace of their usual eateries, they might find a culinary cure at Remedies.

Chan battles bad guys on-screen, Taiwanese legislature off-screen

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Known on film for zinging the bad guys, Jackie Chan has a soft spot in his heart for animals.

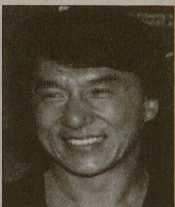

The Hong Kong action star is asking the Taiwanese legislature to pass the nation's first animal protection law, one that would ban the killing of stray dogs.

"I was saddened to learn recently that dogs in Taiwan are being killed cruelly by poisoning, electrocution and starvation. This treatment of dogs goes against everything that an advanced, human nation like Taiwan represents," Chan wrote in a Sept. 16 letter to Secretary General Liu Pi-Liang.

Chan, who stars in the new movie Rush Hour, enjoys Tom Cruise-like status in Hong Kong and Japan.

He made the appeal on behalf of the group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, which says there are some 2 million stray dogs on the streets of Taiwan.

Dogs are popular pets on the island.

As a college student, what attracted you to Union Carbide?

"As a college student, I was introduced to Union Carbide through the summer intern program. After interning with the company for two summers, what attracted me to a full-time position with Union Carbide was the opportunity to be involved, not only with process improvement projects, but also with the day-to-day operations of a production unit."

Why has Union Carbide been the right choice for your career?

"Union Carbide has offered me the opportunity to expand my chemical engineering education through my involvement in the many different aspects of plant operations. These include Responsible Care, project improvement work, day-to-day operations, environmental compliance, marketing and research and development."

What advice would you offer about choosing a career?

"My advice for someone choosing a career would be to get involved with a professional society such as AIChE. The corporate representatives that participate in these meetings are excellent sources of information for what opportunities exist for a chemical engineer. Also, try to participate in a summer intern program. The knowledge you can gain from a summer intern experience is extremely valuable when making a career choice."
