New Orleans residents uneasy about Georges

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Big Easy was decidedly uneasy Sunday as New Orleans prepared for its worst nightmare hurricane — a massive storm that could sit overhead for days, driving Lake Pontchartrain over its levees and submerging the city.

"We're just waiting for the trigger to be pulled," said Lt. Col. Ronnie Jones of the Louisiana State Police, but thousands didn't wait for Hurricane Georges to arrive. They fled, turning Interstates 10 and 55 into bumper-to-bumper processions.

More than 1.5 million people were ordered or urged to leave New Orleans and coastal areas.

The storm, with sustained wind of 110 mph, was expected to smash the Gulf Coast Sunday night or early Monday. Intermittent downpours started Saturday night, and the storm surge started flooding low-lying coastal roads on the Florida Panhandle Sunday afternoon.

"I would be scared if I were in New Orleans right now," said Joerg Lehmann, 23, a German air force student at the Pensacola Naval Air Station. He was among the last people leaving Florida's Perdido Key.

More than 300 deaths had been blamed on the hurricane in the Caribbean.

Forecasters said up to 25 inches of rain could fall on New Orleans, coupled with a storm surge that could drive millions of gallons of water up the Mississippi River toward the city.

In a city that averages 6 feet below sea level and bordered by swamps, tidal lakes and the Mississippi — the results could be catastrophic.

Georges was the most serious storm to threaten New Orleans since 1969, when Camille slammed into the coast of Mississippi and Louisiana, causing flooding as far north as Virginia and West Virginia and killing 259 people.

Library size is a criteria for determining ranking of universities across the nation.

Currently Texas A&M is 41st in library ranking in the nation. University of Texas is 9th.

Through the Sterling C. Evans library extension and renovation, the University is aiming to raise the ranking of the library and in turn raise A&M's nationwide ranking to achieve the 20/20 goal.

In other business, the Board chose Ferro-Saylors Inc. of Houston to construct the Community Center at University Apartments which will be completed by Spring 2001 at an estimated $2.5 million.

SCHOLARSHIP

"This program is what my father is most proud of. This program is what separates Texas A&M from other universities," Wisenbaker said. He added that programs similar to this one have been implemented at other universities, but have not been as successful. He attributes the success to the "Aggies helping Aggies" ideal.

Wisenbaker Jr's student was also on hand. Ganesh Shammugan, a sophomore Biochemistry major, said that he feels a debt toward Wisenbaker, and will repay it by participating in the scholarship as a donor when he is financially able to.

"I've seen the benefits of this program first hand as a student. I feel I owe a debt. I plan on repaying it by becoming a donor," Shammugan said.

Another sponsor, William G. "Breezy" Breazeale, '35, is the agent of class of 1935. The class as a whole sponsors a student.

"We went to school and graduated during the depression, so we know better than anybody what it is like to not have money," Breazeale said, he went on to say that he put himself through college by working at Sbisa and being a walk-on to the A&M track team.

The celebration also consisted of several speakers, speaking on be-

BROADCAST

She said these efforts prompted A&M to redouble its efforts to educate on sexual harassment. She said the teleconference is part of the effort, as is a conference in October when Coskey will speak.

Kristin Harper, associate of the Department of Student Affairs said the teleconference is ongoing.

She said she would like to see people who are in supervisory positions as well as students at the center.

Harper said it does not seem like anything to get into the teleconference.

Stout said A&M has a harassment policy that is a definition of harassment where a person can go to or to file a complaint.

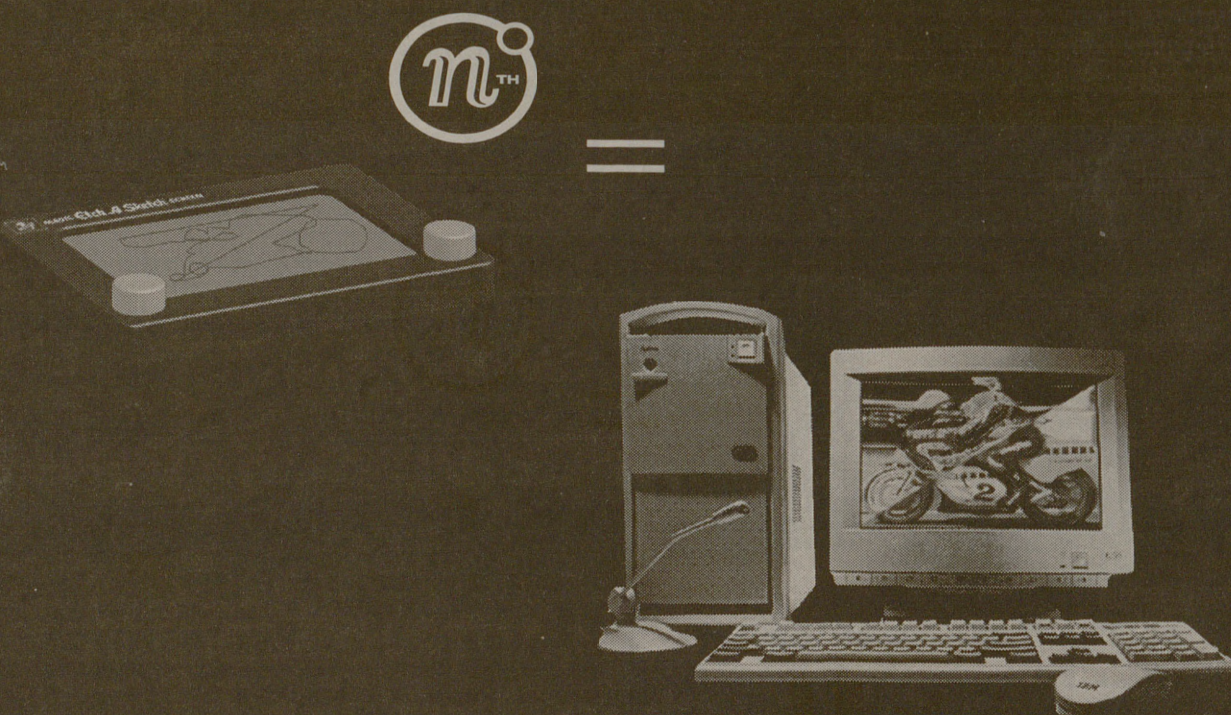

half of receiving the PES, as it meant to them.

Tony Pelletier, '75 spoke about how the scholarship enabled him to attend college and fulfill his dreams and goals. Pelletier said that it was not financially possible for him to attend a school like Texas A&M University until he received the PES. He closed by saying the scholarship recipients strengthen their bond with their donors and encouraged students to give the program more than their own money.

Pelletier also said the scholarship allowed him to become a well-rounded student. "I had a strong financial backing. The scholarship gave me a chance to dream. It allowed me to focus on school and related activities. I would not have had the time I had to work through school. It also opened up doors and many friendships," Pelletier said.

Kathleen Cassin, a sophomore molecular and cell Biology major, concluded the guest speaker spoke about her bond with her sponsor, Frank Muller. She said that Muller told that she equals power, and power equals options. She ended by saying Muller for taking part in the scholarship.

Cassin also said the scholarship played a key role in her decision to come to A&M. She said that she love with the campus life came here, and the scholarship made the financial decision
