Agent: Rodman to retire

Chicago Bulls considers new coach

NEW YORK (AP) — Phil Rodman, the colorful and controversial seven-time NBA champion, has announced he will retire from professional basketball, his agent said yesterday. "He doesn't want to play," agent Dwight Manley said. "He wants to go into the sports and entertainment field. Some people have convinced him that he wants to become a movie star." Manley said the Chicago Bulls forward gave him the news yesterday afternoon over the phone. He is retiring even though several teams are interested in Manley said. He declined to specify.

"I don't think that was fair to those teams," he said. Rodman won three championships with the Chicago Bulls in 1996, 1997 and 1998, and titles with the Detroit Pistons in 1989 and 1990.

His career was also marked by outrageous antics, from Madonna to flying off to Las Vegas several times a month to marrying Carmen Electra to seeking annulment to dressing in a book signing.

Rodman also made an appearance as a professional wrestler over the summer and said he would like to continue that.

"I'm not going to regret him anymore," said Manley, who was obviously miffed at the client's decision.

Manley refused to say whether Rodman would stop representing him "in a versatile."

Rod
